Bellefonte Republican.

VOL. XXII. BELLEFONTE, PA., THURSDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 25, 1890. NO 39.

Established in 1869.} "Let us see to it that a Government, of the People, for the People, and by the People, shall not perish from the Earth."---A. LINCOLN. Terms: $1 50 per Year

KEEP an eye on that tax receipt. October 4 is last day.

THE granger picnic last week didn't pan out so favorable, politically, as the democrats had hoped it would.

IF the voters of Centre county will consult their own interests they will vote for and elect every man on the Republican ticket.

WHLE the democratic papers are asking for proof of the Sheriff deal story they had better hunt up some proof of some of the accusations they have made. Just to even things up a little, you know.

ALL the democratic papers throughout the state are now taking backwater and making humble apologies to General Hastings for lying about him the way they did for a few days. They should have known better in the first place.

THE Pittsburg Times had the credit for printing the first and biggest campaign lie and now has to suffer the humiliation and shame of having it thrust home to its own office. The republican ignore it and the democrats won't own it.

THE odor of freshly fried fat will soon pervade the political atmosphere.—Watchman. Is this the forerunner of another thirty-eight thousand dollar campaign story or has the Watchman editor made a midnight visit to the democratic pig pen.

IT was hardly to be expected that the directors of the Chicago World's Fair would choose anyone but a Chicagoan for Director General but it is gratifying to know that General Hastings came in a good second in the race. His executive abilities may still be utilized in the service of the Exposition.

THE "legal light" who writes up politics for the Millheim Journal had better go to Roopsburg and start a political organ—or else hide himself in some shady bower until the election is over. The political information (?) he gives to the readers of that paper is indeed too enlightening.

THE Orvis faction of the democratic party was successful in knocking out the Meek faction when it came to making the county nominations. Will it be as successful in knocking out Meek, for the district nomination for State Senator? One thing is already plain to all observers, and that is that if untiring effort and low trickery will accomplish the job P. Gray Meek's name is already "Dennis." Hipple, of Clinton county, is booked for that nomination and there are parties in Bellefonte that are going to see that he gets it, too.

THE active and progressive canvass which Senator Delamater is making is causing the esteemed enemy a great deal of trouble. They have reached the conclusion that it will be a good idea for their candidate to stir around a little. Senator Delamater's canvass has been a most effective one so far. He is clear headed and earnest, and has a way of saying something to fit the occasion, besides having an agreeable presence and a taking manner, which is remarked by all who meet him. Those who keenly observe the political drift have not failed to see that the Republican candidate has steadily grown in popular favor. That this will continue from day to day during the remainder of the campaign there is not the shadow of a doubt, and that means that his majority will be overwhelming.

THE organs have concluded to do General Hastings some justice, and are now busy telling their readers that they published something the General did not say in his Pittsburg speech when they made the statement that he said that a Republican who robbed the State treasury was better than the best Democrat. Of course every one knew that General Hastings did not indulge in such language and a few of the organs who said he did are proceeding to take it back. The majority of them however, will stick to it that he did until election day in the hope of driving some straight out Democrats into the Scott-Mugwump combination that hopes to make a start in the direction of electing Cleveland President in 1892 by electing Pattison Governor of Pennsylvania in 1890.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE INDEPENDENTS.

From the Altoona TRIBUNE.

It might be worth while to fairly and honestly inquire who are the independents in Pennsylvania, and what is back of their organization which openly proposes to place Robert E. Pattison in the governor's chair.

The men who are prominent among the disaffected are Wharton Barker, of Philadelphia; Chris. Magee, of Pittsburgh; ex-Senator Emery and George E Mapes. What is the motive in the case of each one of these gentlemen? We think no one who knows the history of Mr. Barker and the blight which has fallen upon his political aspirations will doubt that he has gone into opposition because things did not turn out as he desired.

As long ago as March 1881, when James A Garfield became president, Mr. Barker aspired to a cabinet position, but his claims were not regarded. He was an original Harrison man and after the election of 1888 imagined that he was entitled to the post of secretary of the tressury. His name does not seem to have been considered, and he apparently holds Senator Quay responsible. We think it is very evident that if Mr. Barker now held a cabinet portfolio he would be an ardent supporter of Senator Delamater and on friendly terms with Mr. Quay. Thus it turns out that he is seeking not the purification of the republican party, but revenge for fancied personal slights.

As for Mr. Magee he is notoriously a practical politician, with an undisguised contempt for reform and reformers. It is an open secret that his disaffection is entirely owing to the fact that he is unable to control the political patronage of Western Pennsylvania. He does not object to bossism; he wants to be boss. Justice to Mr. Magee demands the acknowledgement of the fact that he makes no false pretenses. He does not profess a yearning to destroy the republican party as a means of "purification" He wants to control Western Pennsylvania and in his opinion the surest way to secure his hearts desire is to overthrow Senator Quay. The defeat of the republican party in 1890 would, he believes, accomplish that; hence his present attitude.

Senator Emery occupies almost the same attitude. He is ambitious, and his ambition has been thwarted. As for George E. Mapes, he has not been in sympathy with the republican party for years. He was one of the editors of the Philadelphia Times, a journal which is hostile to the republican party, and he resigned his position as a democratic editor in order that he might more effectually aid the democratic party by acting as chairman of a mythical independent republican state committe.

As for the fifty-six Philadelphians who style themselves the Lincoln republican club, several of them are visionaries, as we have already said and we don't think a single one has been in sympathy with the republican party for years. The majority are importers, and as such opposed to the tariff policy upheld by republicans. This, after all, is the secret of their advocacy of Mr Pattison's election. They talk very glibly about bossism and corruption, profess their loyalty to republican principles and their earnest desire for the purification of the party in the fires of defeat, but deep, down in their hearts is a desire for the triumph of the "revenue reform" policy of which Cleveland is the champion and Pattison is the supporter, and they know that Pattison's election in 1890 would mean a tremendous boom for Cleveland in 1892. Thus it will be seen that these respectable gentlemen come before the people of Pennsylvania with a falsehood upon their lips. After all, it is not the generation of the republican party which they seek, but the advancement of their private business interests.

Such are the motives of the more prominent independents as viewed in the cold light of truth. We do not object to their alliance with the democrats. In this country every man has a right to choose his own political associates. But they ought to be honest. They should not disguise their real sentiments. If they are discontented because they can't get what they want in the way of official honors, because they can't find places for their followers, because they want to increase their profits as importers by the adoption of a free trade policy, they should be manly enough to say so. Fortunately their disguise is so clumsily worn that it deceives no one who has clear vision. They will doubtless deceive a few voters. But if the sentiment in Blair county is any index to that of the state their following will be insignificant and the republican party will achieve a magnificent victory in November.

Charged as a Traitor.

Notwithstanding the fact that the "ring" of the Democratic party defeated Dunkle for the nomination for Sheriff they are not yet satisfied. Now they are charging him with being a traitor. Now they blame him with "giving away" the $900 Sheriff deal. The "boss faction" was not satisfied with defeating the man who had worked hard and honestly for the nomination but now they are trying their best to down him entirely by calling him a traitor to his party for giving away party secrets.

Mark well the above, also the following: If Thomas Dunkle "gave away" the $900 Sheriff deal, as he is charged with doing by the leaders of the party machine—the very men who knocked Mr. Dunkle out for the nomination for Sheriff, it is plainly evident that there is something in the deal after all or else Mr. Dunkle would not have been able to have given anything away and there would have been no occasion to charge him as being a traitor.

Whether Mr. Dunkle turned traitor or whether he didn't, one thing is evident. He would be altogether excusable, under all circumstances for doing so. After being virtually kicked out of the party at the county convention by the low, mean trickery that was used in his case it is not to be wondered at if he should turn around and divulge the methods by which the machine had done its work. Such an act would not be traitorous but would simply show the good common sense of the person directly interested. But how will Mr. Dunkle like the charge of traitor as coming direct from the leaders of the democratic party? Will he endure it?

IN his recent speech at Allentown, Senator Delamater made a particularly clear statement of the issue between the two great parties in the present campaign. He said: "I stand here as the representative of protection. In this campaign my opponent appears with the mask torn off, and he stands as the avowed representative of free trade. We are engaged in a great struggle now; but we are on the eve of a greater one in 1892 in which this issue will be even more clearly defined. On this account this State must do its share, not in a mild way, but in a most emphatic way. The Republican party has taken a stand in its platform on the question of State taxation. The party has taken the view that the land of the farmer, your homes and mine, have been excessively taxed and bear more than their burden of the public expenses as against the corporations. The party says to the farmer it would put on corporations and on personal property their share, and it will put on enough tax that the counties can be paid back sufficient to afford a relief which will be felt at once by the farmer and the land owner," That is the issue boiled down to a fine point, and just there the Republican side of it stands or falls.

GET to solid work early. Every Republican has an important share in the picket duty of this year. Only about six weeks of time remain before election and the issues involved demand thorough discussion. As it is impossible to separate national and State issues so it is true that the county and district candidates of the Republican party are in their places as necessary as the higher names on the list. The principles of the party are worthy of thorough and logical exposition. Our candidates have nothing to fear and everything to gain by a bold and aggressive canvass. Starting with a strong cause, and gaining as the election approaches, ever name on the list, from Governor to Auditors, should be a winner. Let no vote escape.

—A writer in an exchange says: "There is an odd superstition about the weather which I find very few people know of, although I have heard since childhood. It is that, however, gloomy and dull it may be on Wednesday, the sun is sure to show itself, if only for a few minutes, as Wednesday, was the day on which it was created. Whenever I have noticed it has been so, and it is certainly a curious coincidence."

THE PARTY OF THE PEOPLE.

The republican nominees—both county and State—are deserving and worthy of support because they represent the great party of the people and for the people. All the great and important measures that have been adopted for the public good were brought about through the Republican party. And now the platform of this great party is all that a nation could desire or demand. Condensed into the form of a short creed for hurried readers it is just like this:

We believe in a free ballot and in having every vote counted.

We believe in protection for protection's sake, and we are not ashamed of it.

We believe in abolishing internal taxes created for war purposes.

We believe in the direct protection of American labor against cheap foreign labor.

We believe in free internal competition.

We believe in railroad regulation.

We believe in homesteads and good homestead titles for citizens.

We believe in home rule for big and intelligent Territories.

We believe in a double monetary standard.

We believe in the utmost facilities for education, as worth all they can cost.

We believe in a big merchant marine and in American ship yards.

We believe in a good navy, good coast defences and good water routes for commerce.

We believe in making other nations respect our rights and pay for all they get from us.

We believe in protecting American citizens against foreign interference, not only at home but in any part of the world.

We believe in civil service reform more than ever; and

We believe that nothing is too good for the soldiers who risked their lives to save the country and saved it.

Who wouldn't or who couldn't support a party with the above platform?

IF the Centre Reporter will take the trouble to compare candidates on the two tickets before a board of three disinterested judges it will find that those making up the Republican county ticket are if anything more respectable than those that make up the democratic ticket. As for machine nominations if we lived in the glass house the Reporter lives in we would keep a close mouth as to how our opponents' nominations were made. As to the whiskey; all that was seen or tasted on the day of the Republican county convention was by democrats and not republicans. Indeed it was not half so bad as it was when the democrats held their convention: On the morning of the day of the Republican county convention a prominent democrat stepped up to the fountain in front of the court house yard to get a drink of water and while there said "To day we've got to drink water; one week ago I wouldn't have washed my feet in this stuff," and the man told the truth, for very few of all who attended the democratic county convention would have been able to wash their feet in anything that day.

Fix Up the Alley.

Last Spring there was a petition up before council to have the borough open out and grade the alley in the rear of Thomas or Smith street. The petition was referred to the Street committee for investigation and report and their report was not favorable. The alley referred to is a shame and disgrace to the borough and should be fixed. If the borough authorities were directly interested it would then soon be fixed.

—A casual glance at a newspaper will show a list of men who help to build up the town. If you see a good sized, live advertisement by each of the principal merchants and a card from each of the small ones, you need not inquire as to the prosperity of the town—it's solid. But if you find the most extensive merchants not advertising their business, then you may set it down as a fact that those who do try to push their business and the town with its interests, have a hard time and an uphill journey all the year through.

—There was a meeting on Monday evening at the Fountain office of a number of residents of Bellefonte who favor a Nationalistic form of Government and who purpose establishing a Nationalist Club. The question was discussed pro and con and another meeting was set to be held next Monday evening at the same place.

—Almost time to begin to fatten the Thanksgiving turkey.

Our Story Teller.

THE EXILES

A RUSSIAN STORY.

"You were our debtor, Yermac; I am now yours," he answered. "But do not all these circumstances cause you to reflect? Will you not, at last, depart from that cruel attitude towards us which has made us enemies?"

"As to that, it is impossible!"

"We esteem and hate each other!"

"I have no hatred."

"But I should much prefer hatred, the blind instrument of barbarous legislation, to that inflexibility of character which nothing can touch, nothing can convince, and nothing can move. Your hatred, if not already extinguished, would surely be extinguished at this hour when we contract such great obligations towards you. But you can neither hate nor love."

"I obey more elevated dictates."

"Here, take your weapons again, Yermac," said Yegor. "Whatever you may say, I now no longer fear anything from you. Take back your gun, or, rather, leave me yours and take mine. I owe you that," added he, casting a compassionate look on poor Dimitri, whose soul seemed about to take its flight.

From that moment, M. Lafleur was forced to transform himself altogether into a nurse. It was not easy to care for Yermac's son. The ball had penetrated deeply, and the Parisian possessed none of the resources of a surgeon.

Hence the state of the unhappy young man grew worse with extreme rapidity. There was no hope for him.

A few days later—at the nocturnal hour when Dimitri had arrived at the camp of the fugitives—three men, the two Yakoutes and the Tunguse, lighted a fire upon the shore of the sea to dig a grave. When the fire had sunk in the snow to the level of the soil, the three men dug up the earth with a spear of hard wood. After an hour of this toil, which by developing their heat caused to hover above them a vapor whitened by the moon in its fugitive apparitions, the three men returned to the hut to announce that the grave was ready.

An instant afterwards, they reappeared without, bearing a stiffened body wrapped in a sheet of cloth. Ladislas preceded them. He held in his hand a lantern to illuminate the dark points of the road. Yermac came behind them, followed by Yegor and M. Lafleur.

Around the hut, the dogs were howling in a lamentable fashion. It was the knell of the dead.

This group of men advanced over the rough surface of the soil, through a lugubrious obscurity and beneath a sky veiled by rapidly moving clouds. It was terribly cold, the thermometer indicating thirty-two degrees below zero.

They reached the grave. There, without the least rite, the frozen body was laid in the frozen ground and covered with snow for a monument. The poor father saw all this done with tearful eyes.

The two Yakoutes had prepared a wooden cross. They erected it and it stood out black from the surrounding whiteness.

And when the spectators raised their eyes to the sky, they saw to their great surprise that the full moon was shining in the centre of an immense cross-shaped glory, reproducing itself six times in the heavens with a sinister effect.

The polar night stretched out its tremendous veil through which the stars pierced with extraordinary brilliancy; through the cold air, a great light fell upon the black hills, the snowy peaks and the glassy sea. The vast silence, broken only by the howling of the dogs, filled the mind with an indescribable feeling of uneasiness and fear, as if it were under the empire of a nightmare which nothing could drive away.

The same thought then assailed these three men, so far from their natal countries. Yermac, Yegor, and good M. Lafleur were transported in imagination to the lands of the sun. Who knew if they would ever see them again, and if a cold grave would not open for them also in this region of the pole?

Yegor and M. Lafleur grasped the hand of Dimitri's father to console him, and then grasped each other's to strengthen themselves in their resolutions.

"Shall we, Yermac," said Yegor, "before this tomb promise mutual assistance and succor?"

"No, Yegor," answered the chief of police; "you brought me into this region. I followed you without too much resistance, because your courage had made an impression upon me. But ask nothing further of me."

The Yakoutes started on their journey the next evening in a south-east wind, vulgarly called the warm wind, which had blown all day, causing the thermometer to rise above zero, softening the snow, and melting the ice incrusted in the two little windows of the hut. The moon lighted up their road, and if the dogs held out at the rate they commenced, they would make over eight miles an hour.

On seeing them depart with the two nartas, Yermac, already much discouraged by the death of his son, lost all hope of fleeing. More taciturn than usual, he refused all consolation, all assistance. Nadege had tried without success to induce him to accept food at Ladislas' hands.

When the guides had gone, he seated himself near the spot where Dimitri had been buried. In the pale light which fell from above, the wooden cross seemed to be the centre of a vast cemetery.

In the distance, upon the sea, in the direction of the icebergs, the ice, broken up by the action of the sudden heat and the dash of the free waters set in motion by the wind, gave vent to resounding and continued crackings, which mingled with the noise of the waves dashed against the promontories by the gale. The Polar Sea had, for a few hours, shaken off the yoke of winter.

CHAPTER XXV.—YERMAC'S EXPERIENCES.

Yermac was hungry. For several days his means of sustenance had been limited to two lemmings (a species of small rat) caught in the traps he had set on the marshy plain which bordered upon the shore of the sea. The foxes and gluttons obstinately kept away from the traps.

He had also discovered several hiding-places in which foxes had collected numerous lemmings slain by them, as one might judge from the fact that their skulls had been pierced by the canine teeth of those animals. In one of these hiding-places, Yermac found half of a white hare. But the flesh of all these creatures, spoiled by its long stay in the earth, could only be used by him as bait for his traps.

He was hungry, but would accept nothing from his companions. He did not regret, despite the tortures of his stomach, having voluntarily stepped aside from the common life. Nevertheless, he comprehended that, if he did not take some energetic resolution he would run the risk of perishing from inanition.

The fall of the temperature augmented the sharpness of his wants. His limbs grew numb and his sight became extremely faint. His skin grew dry, discolored and earthy: it seemed glued to his bones, so prompt had been the emaciation of the muscles. His pulse was scarcely perceptible; his body lost all warmth and it seemed to him that his very breath was frozen. He dragged himself along like a man who is slowly recovering from a severe illness.

His sleep became light, and, when he strove to summon slumber as a restoring agent, the lethargy which took possession of him frightened him—he saw in it a precursor of death. He felt himself subjected to the most terrible trial he had yet undergone in a life full of painful incidents. And yet he was not afraid of weakening in his resolution, of being forced to ask favors or of placing himself anew at the mercy of the fugitives. What he feared was that death might compel him to abandon the pursuit of them, that he might not be able to return from one of his nocturnal walks, in the midst of which moral discouragement and physical weakness seized upon and overthrew him.

These walks, in company with hunger, across the ice or through the snow, amid intense cold and beneath the pale light of the moon which gave fantastic figures and enormous proportions to distant heaps of ice blocks, were rapidly wearing him out. Sometimes the moon hid itself; a thick fog came from the sea, and the snow fell beaten by violent gales.

Armed with a stick, he looked about him with eyes enlarged by fever and the hallucination of a disordered brain; his teeth chattered, and his tongue, with unconscious movements, worked in his mouth as if it were gathering up food chewed and prepared for swallowing. With empty stomach, he sought a prey, forgetting that he himself, feeble as he was, might fall into the clutches of some polar bear in search of a feast. He sought and found nothing with which to satisfy his hunger, now became a sort of madness. If there had been grass, he would have swallowed it like a pasturing beast. Oh! that the recently fallen snow had in something resembled the manna of the Israelites!—but it was not even capable of quenching his terrible thirst!

Wide awake, he had epicurean dreams. He, who all his life had been frugal, saw blocks of ice suddenly cover themselves with a white cloth, upon which were spread out in abundance, beneath the chandeliers of orgies, savory victuals and succulent preparations brought from every portion of the globe; and thus he renewed without the power to shake it off, the punishment of Tantalus. At other times, his wandering imagination led him to banquets of cannibals, devouring human flesh!

And when, broken but indomitable, without regret for having exposed himself to death from inanition, he threw a sad look over the desolate solitudes, hunger, terrible personification, identifying itself with himself, seemed to him to be their sole guest.

Yegor had restored him his gun, but he knew not what had become of his munitions during the rapidly-made sledge journey. Would it be too humiliating to ask his companions to furnish him with a new supply? he resolved to do so. He had no other resource. Without munitions, all was over with him and he knew it.

He wished to live; he wished, when the nartas should return to the camp, to resume with the Yakoute Chort those stimulations and seductions which had nearly succeeded. If he could flee, altogether relieved of obligations as he now felt himself in regard to Yegor Semenoff and his companions, the game would become equal. The winter had scarcely commenced. Nijni-Kolimsk, that is to say the power of the law, was not so very far away! What matter how he suffered if, in the end, he succeeded in his attempt, repulsive, even perilous, but for that reason worthy of furnishing an example to all those who allow themselves to capitulate with their consciences.

The next day—he was forced to hasten, for the moon would soon abandon the nights to their obscurity, like that of the days—Yegor and M. Lafleur saw him start out, scarcely able to drag himself along but ready to venture afar. Singular hunter, leaning upon the butt of his gun as he walked, staggering over the snow, and so thin in his furs, so bent, that he seemed to be posing for some funereal allegory!

He walked to the east, in the direction of Cape Chelagsk, across abrupt earthy hills and frozen bogs. He was fortunate enough to meet two deer, belonging to that peculiar species which inhabits the shores of the Arctic Ocean, and does not retire into the forests in winter. He fired at one of them and killed it.

All his confidence returned to him. The only difficulty was to convey the animal to the encampment. Full of ardor and proud of himself, he seized the deer by the antlers and found strength to drag it as far as the hut. At last, he had food enough for many days.

The chief of police rapidly recovered. He resumed his position of unfriendly observer, living as little as possible among the fugitives. Despite the cold, he remained without, returning to go to bed when everybody was asleep, and, in the morning, stealing away the first from the hut.

On one occasion, Yegor assured himself that he had not returned the night before, and became very anxious about him; some misfortune must have happened to his tormentor. At an early hour he set out to hunt for him, taking the direction of the sea, while M. Lafleur went to look in the vicinity of Yermac's traps.

Yegor advanced, slowly and cautiously, through darkness somewhat dissipated by the brilliancy of the stars. He listened. A sepulchral silence reigned, broken only by the groaning of the wind.

Suddenly, on passing around an enormous block of ice, he perceived Yermac sunk to the belt in a hole in the midst of newly formed ice.

The chief of police was keeping himself above the ice with his elbows, but could not extricate himself without help. He was waiting with a calm and resigned air—for what?

"What are you doing there?" cried Yegor.

"I am looking for deliverance or death!" answered Yermac. "I have fallen into a fissure of the ice."

"Take hold of this and I will pull you out," said Yegor, and he extended the butt of his gun towards Yermac.

It was with great difficulty that he extricated the chief of police, whose body was incrusted in the ice as in a sheath.

"Again I owe my life to you!" murmured Yermac. "Everything conspires against me."

"Why should contracting such a debt cost you so much?" observed Yegor.

Yermac was silent.

Without a word, they returned to the hut. M. Lafleur entered an instant afterwards.

"This is, indeed, a day of accidents!" cried Yegor, on perceiving the latter. "My good Monsieur Lafleur, your nose is frozen."

On hearing these words, Ladislas ran out-of-doors to procure some snow and, a minute later, M. Lafleur, paler than his nose, began to rub it to restore to it heat and life. He warmed up at this work, got out of breath, dropped upon a rude stool and said, as he did so:

"It seems to me that this polar winter is miserably long."

"My dear Parisian," answered Yegor, "the winter is only commencing; but be patient—on the 28th of December the sun will reappear at the horizon. The cold, however, will not diminish—far from it! As for me, I shall be satisfied as long as your friendship for us remains warm!"

"My friendship!—you may depend upon that, my dear Yegor. Pardon my little display of impatience—for one does not see his nose frozen without some very natural emotion."

CHAPTER XXVI.—PRIVATIONS IN THE POLAR NIGHT.

When Yermac had eaten enough of his deer—he had offered some of the choicest pieces to Yegor and his companions, but had received a refusal similar to that he had made them—he utilized the remainder for his traps. Thanks to this bait of alluring odor, he succeeded in capturing three fine gluttons, the flesh of which he carried away. The precious fur of these animals was carefully put aside. Yermac, with his project of flight, wished to create for himself resources for his journey; besides, the fur of the glutton commands a very high price among the natives of the north of Siberia.

The Yakoutes did not return quickly with their nartas loaded with food, and the fugitives began to lack provisions. In their turn, they felt the rough attacks of hunger. Then, touching combats of generosity arose among them. M. Lafleur pretended that the cold produced in him an effect contrary to that which it usually produces and appeased his hunger. He insisted that Nadege and Yegor should take the largest shares. Ladislas devised means to make his adopted sister believe he had eaten too much and, with genuine self-denial, obliged her to eat the food of which he deprived himself.

Yermac, much surprised to see the fugitives so soon reduced to the extremities from which he had just been relieved, studied with curiosity the suffering expression of their countenances. The more they weakened—while he was regaining strength and courage—the more things became equal between him and them. His satisfaction would have been perfect, if he had not shared the fears of his companions in regard to the two guides.

The fugitives sought to explain the delay of the Yakoutes, and economized their food. Yermac was disturbed by the prolonged absence of Chort. He regretted having said too much to Tekel's comrade concerning the people he served.

Perhaps, afraid of compromising themselves, the guides would not return. In that case, Yermac regarded his flight as impossible. But would not the continuation of the fugitives' journey also be rendered impossible? What could they do without their sledges, without their dogs, and without provisions upon the deserted shores of the Arctic Ocean! They would be forced to avow themselves vanquished, incapable of pushing their attempt to the end, and would be but too happy to be able to return to Yakoutsk under the protection of the chief of police.

The fugitives were soon reduced to disputing their rations with Wab and the two Siberian dogs which Yegor had kept. These animals, deprived of nourishment, uttered lugubrious complaints. The Siberian dogs are accustomed to howl four times a day, but Yegor's dogs now howled all day and all night.

The situation of the exiles grew painful in the extreme; and, added to this, the biting cold occasioned them all sorts of suffering.

One morning, little Ladislas complained that his feet were excessively cold. M. Lafleur took off his shoes and uttered a cry on seeing that the child's stockings, frozen to his feet, adhered to them. It was necessary to use caution in disembarrassing him of the icy coverings. Happily, the feet, although stiff, were yet unharmed. M. Lafleur re-established the circulation of the blood by rubbing them vigorously with brandy.

The difficulties of life were also augmented by reason of the cold. They were forced to cut the meat with hatchets. If they touched an iron utensil, without taking the precaution to cover the hand, the contact of the iron with the skin produced the effect of a burn. If Yegor, on consulting his little compass, neglected to hold his breath, the glass immediately vanished beneath a coating of ice. Out-of-doors, their eyelids were covered with an icy crust. Yegor's watch would no longer go, although he took great care to carry it always upon him and to put it at night under his coverings.

Although the fugitives were clad in flannel undershirts, drawers and stockings of wool, flannel shirts, knit jackets, coats of heavy felt-cloth, and seal-skin pantaloons—indispensable objects that Yegor had had the foresight to purchase at the bazar of Yakoutsk—and although they slept with their clothes on and covered with furs, frequently the cold, hunger's auxiliary, prevented them from sleeping.

When M. Lafleur exposed himself to the air, he put on a cloth coat, with a veil attached, and covered his head with a woollen cloth resembling a huge dishevelled wig. But his laughable attire had not the power to bring even a smile to the faces of his friends.

The unfortunates were overcome with sorrow. They had escaped from the captivity of men only to fall into that of the elements.

Yet this exile, this imprisonment in the midst of ice and gloom, seemed to have attractions when compared to what Yegor had suffered in the mines of Nertchinsk and Nadege in her life of banishment. Here, hope sustained them. As soon as the sun returned from its long journey, they could continue their own. They compared themselves to those heroes of fairy tales who await their deliverance in a forest or a chateau where some magic power has confined them. The chances of safety increased daily. Oh! that hunger had not so imperiously demanded its rights and made them feel its tyrrany!

Happily, they had passed through the greater portion of that long night which lasts more than a month. At noon, it seemed to them like midnight. In the south, vacillated a little twilight glimmer of a pale yellow. The sun had descended so many degrees that it could be seen only from the top of a mountain more than thirty miles high. When the moon did not appear in the sky, and when the aurora borealis was absent, in the sombre vault of the firmament there were produced only from time to time luminous rays traced by the silver track of a shooting star—a rapid flash in the midst of the deep night, a spark that fell and was extinguished in space.

But to break the frightful silence of the polar night, which affected the mind still more than the disappearance of the light, there was only the noise produced by the ice blocks as they broke one against another in the incompletely solidified places, a noise capable of making a strange impression when heard during this long and cold night. Now it was hollow and continuous like the distant surf of the sea, now sharp and piercing like the noise of the ungreased wheels of a cart, and now resounding and jerky like the discharges of cannon.

Yegor and M. Lafleur had begun to hunt, but without success. The shores of the Arctic Ocean seemed depopulated forever. The odor of the dogs and their howling had driven away the white bears. Nevertheless, they had the luck to kill two seals, the fat of which they ate, washing it down with tea. M. Lafleur thought it tasted like rancid butter, but grew accustomed to it.

Finally, Yegor and M. Lafleur decided to hunt for white bears upon the frozen sea. The day, which for a week had been gradually returning, rendered this project feasible.

The next day, when a yellowish reflection, appearing in the south, announced the rising of the sun, Yegor and his friend descended well-armed upon the ice, taking with them the two Siberian dogs. Soon, a first jet of light broke forth, and then the sun itself emerged, the color of blood, with its disk gnawed by the mist. The snowy lines of the coast hills and of the huge blocks of ice took a mild tinge, a light pink, and the blue shadows became violet.

After an hour's walk amid the accumulations of ice blocks, broken, crushed, and studded with points, which the English explorers of the North Pole have called hummocks, and which have the appearance of a field upturned by a gigantic plough, the hunters reached a labyrinth of icebergs. There, they saw in the snow numerous tracks of white bears and polar foxes (these foxes are parasites of the bears, from which they succeed, thanks to their agility and nimbleness, in snatching a portion of their prey). A moment afterwards, they discovered a den, the inhabitants of which were absent. These caverns, two yards deep, have two openings—a couple of bears have scarcely sufficient room to lie down in one of them.

A little further on, they saw two bears in ambush. Near one of those round crevices from whence seals issue for air and light—and where they come for the sun's warmth—the bears had collected a pile of snow behind which they were hidden. At the base of the slight mound they had pierced a hole to allow the passage of a paw. They were watching for their prey with so much attention that they did not hear the approach of the two hunters.

After waiting a few minutes, Yegor and M. Lafleur saw the head of a seal emerge prudently from the ice. The quickest of the two bears gave it a blow with its claws which brought it half dead out of the water. Then the bears precipitated themselves upon the amphibious creature, tore it to pieces, and began to devour it.

This was a favorable moment to attack them. Yegor, who had had all the trouble in the world to restrain the two Siberian dogs and keep them silent, released them. On hearing them bark, the bears seemed uncertain as to whether they should allow themselves to be attacked or beat a retreat. But already M. Lafleur had fired a ball at each of them. The bears hesitated no longer, and seeing that they had to deal with resolute hunters, vanished behind the ice blocks.

CHAPTER XXVII.—YERMAC PAYS HIS DEBT.

Then began an animated chase across the blocks of ice. Yegor and M. Lafleur advanced, guided by the furious barking of the dogs. But the bears went still faster; from time to time, the hunters saw them climbing over the icebergs, white as themselves, and altogether out of range of their guns.

As they went along, M. Lafleur told Yegor, who put but slight faith in what he said, that when the ice of the sea commences to form, in the month of September, the white bear female captures and kills a great number of seals which it hides in the hollows of some rock. Afterwards, it goes into the interior of the country to gorge itself with lichens, in order to create in its stomach a sort of mechanical obstruction; then, it returns to its magazines of provisions and fills itself with as much seal fat as it can hold. This done, it takes up winter quarters in a hole it has dug in the side of a glacier.

After a certain period of seclusion, it brings forth one, two, and sometimes three cubs. In this crystalline crib, it nourishes and exercises its progeny in walking until the commencement of April, when, in their turn, the seals begin to bring forth young. Then, the ursine family quits its retreat, the mother marching at its head and snuffing the air. It seeks out and follows, thanks to its scent, the invisible track of a seal as far as the spot where the poor creature is rearing its young offspring. When the bear has found the iglou of the seal, easy to recognize because of its round shape (like the iglou of the Esquimau), it makes a spring, bounds upon the top of the slight habitation, and makes such good use of its four paws and its weight that it breaks it in, immediately seizing upon the young seals with which to regale its cubs.

Yegor observed to M. Lafleur that so many fables circulated in regard to the polar bear that it behooved one not to believe too readily everything said concerning it, especially its wintering by means of voluntary burial.

Suddenly, as they were advancing a little distance apart, a third bear, putting the dogs off the scent—the dogs were running too far forward—surged up from behind a block of ice and came towards them with that confidence in its strength or that ignorance of danger which characterizes the bear of the Arctic Ocean.

Yegor perceived it as it was treacherously advancing; he took aim at it, and M. Lafleur, quickly turning about at this moment, sent a ball after the bear, but missed it. Yegor waited until the animal came nearer. When it was within ten paces, he fired twice and hit it.

The bear, feeling itself wounded, stopped for an instant and howled; but it immediately took to flight, tinging the snow with its blood.

M. Lafleur vainly discharged his gun at it. The bear scampered away, and soon disappeared among blocks of ice whither it was impossible to pursue it.

The dogs, badly trained for the chase, obstinately clung to the tracks of the first two bears, and the hunters ran a great risk of returning empty-handed—a prospect more than disagreeable, considering the scarcity of provisions.

Meanwhile, Nadege and Ladislas, who had remained in the hut beside the fire, grew anxious at the long absence of the hunters. Yermac, seated opposite to them, looked at them in silence, avoiding, when they spoke to him, any other reply than a motion of the head or a shrug of the shoulders.

The look of this taciturn man weighed upon Nadege. Wab, doubtless hearing in the distance the barking of the two Siberian dogs, began to howl in a fashion that made an impression on the young girl.

She put on her warmest garments and, followed by Ladislas, ventured out of the hut. The twilight had begun early, and the state of the sea seemed to her a sufficient cause for uneasiness. Clouds, harbingers of a tempest, were heaped up to the east. Mists were rising from the ocean. Soon she saw the water, beaten by the hurricane, spring up in immense sheaves and fall back noisily upon the white promontories.

Under the influence of a violent north-east wind, the yet free waters of several open spaces threw with unheard-of force enormous blocks upon the plains of ice which they broke into fragments. Plates of ice rose to the summits of the waves, dashed against each other with a crash and disappeared covered with foam. The waves rushed upon the blocks and buried them: but, the next instant, the same blocks, rising again to the surface, scattered the water around them, and, hurling themselves upon the nearest masses, struggled until they got them under. A resonant and continual cracking of the breaking ice mingled with the noise of the waves uplifted by the wind.

The explorers of the polar seas affirm that no word can describe the nature of this noise. It is at first under the convulsed and trembling ice, like the hissing of a thousand arrows, an infernal din in which the sharpest voices yelp mingled with the deepest, and the roaring becomes more and more savage. The ice breaks in concentric cracks; its broken fragments roll one upon another. Then begins a ferocious, titanic strife, a headlong combat which recalls the battle of the elements in the first ages of the world. These masses march, meet, strike each other and dash against each other, changed by a hidden power and seeming to obey passions.

Above these convulsive scenes, the reflection of the ice gives the sky a strange aspect and illuminates it with a supernatural light.

Wab, still with Nadege, began to howl without respite.

Ladislas strove to calm his sister's fears. He told her—which was true—that Yegor and M. Lafleur were hunting among the chains of icebergs situated in the west, and that the free waters could not reach there to execute their sudden ravages.

But the terrified Nadege advanced courageously over the sea, in the direction in which she might hope to meet Yegor, whom she regretted having allowed to venture so far. The young girl thought that in the dim light the hunters would guide themselves by the barking of Wab; she counted upon the intelligence of Yegor's dogs, and followed the faithful animal which, in all probability, would go in the direction where the hunters were.

Suddenly, it seemed to her—and to Ladislas also—that the solid plain over which they were advancing was in motion beneath their feet. They were not deceived. Soon the oscillations were more marked. Beneath their steps, the ice cracked and split. Several black clefts furrowed the snow at random—they were crevices in process of formation.

Nadege wished to go back, but behind them now a canal had opened, encumbered with moving ice. At this sight, the young girl began to utter despairing cries. The lad tried in vain to quiet her. Wab barked louder than ever. The vast cake of ice upon which they were, floated. Suddenly, a wave lifted it, dragged it away, and precipitated it with irresistible force upon the frozen surface.

The shock was terrible! A prolonged cracking resounded beneath their feet, and they felt that the wave, in withdrawing, had borne away enormous fragments of the broken block.

Nevertheless, they arose unhurt. Guided by the instinct of Wab, they began to run in the direction opposite to the tempest, over a field of ice several feet thick, which seemed likely to remain motionless and resist all the efforts made by the waves to separate it; but there, the ice blocks, strongly pressed one against another and bristling with jagged points, opposed a thousand obstacles to the retreat of the two poor creatures.

Soon Ladislas, utterly exhausted, was incapable of advancing further. Nadege took him in her arms, lifted him up, and, though an instant before almost ready to swoon, found sufficient strength to bear the child far from the perilous spot.

Looking about for help, Nadege perceived Yermac, who had been drawn from the hut by the din of the tempest and the barking of Wab.

The chief of police came towards them. He was speedily stopped by a crevice which Nadege had not yet seen but on the brink of which she soon arrived. The young girl gave vent to a heart-rending cry on seeing the insurmountable gap which had opened before them. It was a deep and very long fissure, full of water and bounded on the right by a perpendicular iceberg. It appeared to be seven or eight feet wide.

Nadege and Ladislas seemed to have no other resource than to wait upon the spot until the wind should cease and new ice form and become strong enough to bear them, which would take place in a few hours. But the garments of both, wet with salt water, had frozen upon them. Immobility and waiting, therefore, meant death!

CLOSE OF THE PICNIC.

The Management Have Reason to Feel Satisfied—The Largest Attendance Ever Had.

Friday was really the last day of the Patron's of Husbandry picnic. The crowd during the day was not large, compared with previous days, at any time. Probably two or three thousand persons were on the grounds.

Two speeches were made in the morning and that closed the exercises so far as the management was concerned.

All in all the picnic has been a decided success. The new grounds have proved to be more suitable than the old ones and far nicer than was anticipated. The weather, with the exception of the two first days, was all that could be desired. The attendance exceeded the anticipations of everyone and the accommodations and entertainment furnished by those in charge were all that could be asked. The speaking was good and exceedingly interesting; the exhibitions were large and numerous; the amusements varied and entrancing; the tenting capacity ample and convenient. Verily the Centre county grange have reason to feel satisfied, in fact proud of the seventeenth annual picnic of their organization. The grange is a good thing; it has accomplished much good and is accomplishing more every day; and we are glad to know that the grangers of Central Pennsylvania and of Centre county in particular have progressed so far as they have in their fraternal order.

It is estimated that fully twenty five thousand people attended the picnic this week. From Bellefonte station alone about three thousand tickets were sold. Placing an estimate of the attendance on the basis of the tickets sold at this place and the attendance would be much larger than above stated, as many went there in venicles. Be that as it may, however, everybody should feel satisfied with the crowd that was there. It was a royal good time all around. The exhibitors had a good time; the fatirs had a better one, and the visitors had the best time of all. We hope the Eighteenth Annual picnic to be held in 1891 will be as profitable and interesting as the one held this year.

Forced to Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave their homes yesterday to call at the druggist's for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggist to day for a free sample of this good remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large-size packages 50 cents.

Democracy Scathingly Described.

My fellow citizens, I have erred in calling the Democracy a party. It is an aggregation of the ignorance, the imbecility and the disloyalty of this comtry. [Applause.] It is strongest when public morality is weakest, reinforcing all the dangerous and destructive agencies of society and having neither conscience nor courage of conviction. It is a perpetual and constant menace to the prosperity, the honor of the American people; and yet, fellow citizens, I occasionally hear some poor mortal complaining of the Republican party because it has had many indefensible policies. Well, I have been somewhat of a kicker myself. [Laughter.] There have been Republican leaders that I did not like. There have been Republican policies that I did not approve of and indorse, and I have said so without hesitation. Yet there is one thing never forget. I believe that the worst Republican that ever lived, [Applause.] Politically speaking, I mean. I have many personal friends in the Democratic party, and I have, therefore, always taken the consequences. [Applause.]

There are spots on the sun and now and then the shadows of an eclipse sweep across the burning disc of that luminary, but what would you say about the man who because there were spots on the sun and occasionally the shadow of an eclipse swept across its disc, should light a tallow candle [laughter and applause] and go down in the cellar and shut the trap-door after him and spend the remainder of his days among the vermin and decayed vegetable matter? [Applause.]—Senator Ingalls in his speech at Pittsburg.

—The October number of "Godey's Lady's Book" is bright and attractive. Handsome illustrations, good stories and poems fill its pages. Amongst the table of contents are two serials, which grow in interest, "The Prettiest Girl in Canada," by Elsie Sharpe; "At Fifty-five," by L. A. N.; "Jack's Speering," by C. M. Halloway; "Ted," by Elizabeth Phipps Train; "An Old fashioned Room" by Ada M. Peck; "Mr. and Mrs. Hannibal Hawkins," by Belle C. Greene, etc. Each subscriber has the choice of one of Godey's unrivaled paper patterns. Just think of it, ladies! Twelve patterns and the magazine for one year, for $2.00!

The man arrested the other day for carrying concealed weapons was discharged by the Assistant Burgess because the evidence produced was not sufficient to make out the offence as defined by the Statute. The man was also charged with drunk and disorderly conduct, the charge was proved, and the man was fined accordingly.

BURLESQUE OPERA.

A Highly Entertaining Performance at Stone's Opera House Last Night.

The Adah Richmond Burlesque Opera company gave "Chow-Chow" at Stone's opera house last night to a highly delighted audience. It was a performance filled with fun of the freshest nature and was heartily enjoyed by those present. The points of the play were admirably brought out by the ladies and gentlemen on the stage. Miss Richmond, the leading lady of the company, is an accomplished member of the profession She is attractive in appearance, dresses in excellent taste, possesses a rich musical voice, and adapts herself perfectly to her role. The other members of the company are fully up to the standard of first class burlesque performers and the hits they made were many and telling in their effect.—Yankton Daily Press.

The Dear Boys and Soda Water.

What will the dear Altoona dudes do now that they "cawn't" get their soda water on Sunday and will have to buy an extra pack of cigarettes Saturday night. Most of our young bloods will be glad of it, as there is nothing more embarrassing to a fellow than to pass a drug store with his lady friend and hear the soda fountain "hissing" and he knows the girl hears it. But he can't help it, he has only a nickle and they both can't get soda with that Young men have been known to walk two blocks out of their way to escape hearing the unpleasent noise. Occasionally you will hear some "six dollar a week" clerk say," boys, come in and have a soda," knowing very well that they can't get it. But he apoligizes and says, "I am sorry fellows, but I forgo about the Sunday ordinance," We can stand it if a large city like Pittsburgh can, but it is whispered the dudes then have their canes charged with soda water and that accounts for them sucking their canes so much

MRS. BIRCHALL IS FREE.

The Grand Jury Reports "No Bill" Found Against Her.

BIRCHALL NERVY AS EVER.

The Defense Will Try to Prove That It Was Impossible for Him to Walk the Distance Claimed on the Day of the Murder.

WOODSTOCK, Ont., Sept. 24.—The court room was densely packed when court opened Tuesday morning. Mrs. Birchall and her sister, Mrs. West Jones, occupied seats. Both wore veils and were dressed well and in good taste. Mrs. Birchall looks ten years older than she did last March, when she was a prisoner at Baldwin's boarding house at Niagara Falls. She is very thin and pale, and marks of suffering are indelibly fixed on her face. The grand jury in the case of Mrs. Birchall reported "no bill" on the charge against her of being accessory to the murder.

MRS. BIRCHALL.

Birchall came into court with his old jaunty, debonair expression. He was fresh shaved, well brushed, dapper looking and as nervy as ever.

Charles Benwell, brother of the murdered man, a swarthy, under sized young fellow, was called to the stand. He said he came to the trial in the place of his father, who is ill in England. He identified the false teeth and plate, the pencil case and ring placed in evidence as belonging to his brother. He also identified the keys found on Birchall as his brother's, and said that with them he opened his brother's desk and two trunks. He identified his brother's handwriting on the cigar case found near the body, and also all the clothes worn by the murdered man. He said his brother was of a cheerful disposition, was a tutor, studied a year in Switzerland, farmed a year and a half in New Zealand, then was idle two years before coming to America with Birchall.

William Davis, a civil engineer, who made a survey of the locality of the murder, swore to its correctness. He gave important evidence on the distance from Eastwood station to the place where the body was found.

The defense will doubtless try to prove that it was impossible to walk that distance in the time at Birchall's disposal in that locality on the day of the murder.

Davis swore that the distance from the station and return is nine miles and forty-four hundredths. That he made a test on July 15, on a warm afternoon, the total time of absence being three hours and fifteen minutes, stopping twenty-seven minutes on the way, making the actual walking time two hours and forty-eight minutes. The witness admitted that the roads were dry, not muddy as in February. He was dressed for walking, and was not encumbered with a heavy pea jacket and Mackintosh as Benwell was.

BIRCHALL.

Mr. Blackstock made the witness admit that the underbrush was so thick in the swamp that it would have been practically impossible for a man to have carried a body of his own weight through the swamp, showing that Benwell must have been shot down at the spot where his body was found.

Adjournment was then taken.

A dense throng was gathered in front of the court house as Birchall was taken back to the jail. Carriages were drawn up all around, many of them filled with ladies. Birchall stands the scrutiny of the multitude well. He does not smile so much as he did at his Niagara Falls examination, but is quite composed, and his indifference is amazing.

Detective Murray told The United Press correspondent that the evidence of Roell, the former hotel clerk of Buffalo, who died yesterday at Niagara Falls, is not important. He would simply have testified to Birchall and Benwell being called early on the morning of Feb. 17 and his witnessing their departure.

Editor Sawyer Sues for Damages.

OKLAHOMA CITY, I. T., Sept. 24.—H. W. Sawyer, of The Oklahoma City Times, has commenced suit against Capt. Stiles, in command of the United States troops stationed at this place, for $10,000 damages, the charge being false imprisonment. Last September, during the charter election called by Mayor Couch, the troops under Capt. Stiles were ordered out to quell the riot raised by the opponents of the election call. Conspicuous among the latter was Editor Sawyer, and so obnoxious was he to the military that Capt. Stiles ordered his arrest and imprisonment. He was released after a few hours' confinement and now brings suit for damages.

John C. New Home on Business.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 24.—The Hon. John C. New, consul general at London, has just arrived home and will remain here a couple of months. He laughed heartily when shown a number of clippings from Democratic newspapers about his homecoming. "Politics has nothing whatever to do with my return," said he, "and the only political work I expect to do is to go to the polls and vote if I remain here that long. I have simply come over to look at my business interests and take care of a few private matters that required my personal attention."

THE EMPERORS' FAREWELL.

A Love Feast Between Young William and Venerable Francis Joseph.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—At the farewell between the Emperor Francis Joseph and the Emperor William at Liegnitz the kaiser said: "We of the younger generation can learn much from venerable rulers like those of Austria and Saxony, and we are proud of their opinion that the German army has not deteriorated since the decease of my grandfather, a fact which must be regarded as a pledge for the further continuance of the existing treaties of military alliance."

The Emperor Francis Joseph, who was deeply moved, replied that it had been a great honor to witness the admirable efficiency of the German army, and he would never forget these days. He was convinced that the sincere friendship between the two nations and their sovereigns would be followed by faithful companionship in arms by the respective armies should occasion ever arise—which God forbid.

Coffined Bodies Unearthed by Floods.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—The floods in the department of Gard have caused much damage to property. On Sunday the river Rhone rose nineteen feet, and the town of Beaucaire was flooded. At Vallerangue, on the Herault, thirty-nine miles northwest of Nimes, the river overflowed its banks and undermined a portion of the cemetery. A number of coffins were washed out, and together with their contents floated down the river.

Bismarck Won't Emulate the Bear.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—Prince Bismarck, in a recent interview, referring to the prospect of his return to public life, said that a seat in the Reichstag would entail regular attendance and the discomfort of hotel life, but in the upper house of the Diet he might appear when he chose, and he did not intend, like a bear, to sleep and lick his paws during the winter.

Made Doubly Sure of His Death.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—Maj. von Norman, the commandant of the Cadets' school in this city, committed suicide last night. He took a dose of poison and then opened some of the arteries in his body. The suicide of Maj. Norman following so closely on several other startling suicides by prominent persons within the past week has caused a profound sensation.

Will Await the Result of the Trial.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—Mr. Parnell desires to wait until after the trial of Dillon and O'Brien to see whether it will still be possible for them to go to America, believing the delay will not affect the object of their mission. His health will not permit him to make a personal visit to America.

His Cap May Not Come.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The Standard's Rome dispatch says the report that Archbishop Walsh will be made cardinal is premature.

German Catholics Meet.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 24.—The fourth annual convention of the German Catholic congress was formally opened in this city, and in the night there was a torchlight parade, 12,000 persons being in line. Delegates are in Pittsburg representing nearly every state in the Union. After the parade a monster mass meeting was held at the Grand Central rink. Among the prominent delegates present are Dr. Ernest Lieber, of the Prussian Landsruhe; Right Rev. Bishop Leo Haid, of North Carolina; Right Rev. Bishop Rademacher, of Tennessee; Right Rev. Bishop Janssen, of Illinois; Rev. Muehlsiepen, vicar general of the archdiocese of St. Louis; Rev. Anton Scheidler, vicar general of Indianapolis, and many other distinguished clergyman.

A Rather Dangerous Package.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Sept. 24.—What appears to be a plot to blow up the penitentiary has been discovered. For some days James H. Campbell, who has just finished a two year term, has been lurking about Frankfort, apparently in communication with friends inside the penitentiary. Yesterday a satchel of Campbell's was examined, and it was found to contain eighteen dynamite packages a foot and a half in length, together with 300 feet of fuse. It is believed that Campbell was planning to liberate some of his friends during the excitement occasioned by the explosion.

The Bank Will Resume.

HASTINGS, Neb., Sept. 24.—The City National bank of this city, which suspended payment about three weeks ago on account of a severe run, will be opened next Monday by consent of the comptroller of currency for the purpose of liquidating indebtedness. At a meeting of stockholders a new organization was effected, E. M. Morseman, of Omaha, as president and A. W. Jones as cashier.

Great Expectations.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—Samuel Spooner, a policeman, has received notice from a cousin in Wales that he, as a direct descendant of the Swinton-Spooner family, has fallen heir to a street in London named Swinton street, the property being valued at $2,500,000. Spooner will sail for England to-morrow to investigate the matter.

No Politics in His.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 24.—Uncle Jerry Rusk arrived among his Milwaukee friends last night and would talk of nothing more significant than agriculture and kindred topics to the reporters. He said: "I have not been interviewed, I did not propose to be, and I will not be upon any political question. I decline absolutely to say anything about the Bennet law, and I will not be held responsible for any statement upon that subject accredited to me."

Blown to Atoms by a Cyclone.

CORSICANA, Tex., Sept. 24.—Yesterday afternoon a cyclone swept over the town of Dresden, eight miles from here. The French hotel was unroofed and the Cumbert and Presbyterian church blown to atoms. Two negroes, Orvin Jackson and Frank Hunt, were seriously injured. The tornado devastated a strip of country fifty yards wide and three miles in length.

Annie Goodwin's Case.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The trial of Dr. McGonegal, Mrs. Shaw and "Gus" Harrison, charged with causing the death of Annie Goodwin, the "cigarette girl," by malpractice, was begun today in part I of the court of general sessions before Judge Fitzgerald. The difficult work of securing a jury is now in progress.

Judge Earl Renominated.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The Democratic state convention met Tuesday morning at the Hoffman house, all the members being present but two, who were represented by proxies. The committee unanimously renominated Judge Robert Earl for the court of appeals.

BOUCICAULT'S WIDOWS.

Agnes Robertson and Louise Thorndyke Will Invoke the Law.

BOTH TO CLAIM HIS ESTATE.

If There Is No Will Miss Robertson Will Apply for Letters of Administration and the Courts Will Then Decide Who Is the Legal Widow.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—There will be an interesting contest for the possession of the late Dion Boucicault's estate which will rake up the old scandal of Boucicault's relations to his two surviving wives, Agnes Robertson and Louise Thorndyke. Agnes Robertson sailed yesterday from England on the Servia, and no time will be lost in putting in her claim. Howe & Hummel are the attorneys of Miss Robertson.

It is believed by Miss Robertson's friends that there is no will in existence, and it will rest with the surrogate to decide whether Miss Robertson is not entitled to her share of the estate. If there is a will leaving property to Louise Thorndyke an effort will be made to set the instrument aside.

The claim will be made that Miss Robertson is the only widow, and that the marriage with Miss Thorndyke is bigamous. Mr. Hummel said Tuesday that he is confident he can establish the claim that Louise Thorndyke never was the legal wife of Dion Boucicault. The contest will involve many complicated points of law, as the divorce laws of England and New York state conflict in some essential points.

Divorced in England.

Miss Robertson obtained the decree of divorce in the divorce and admiralty court of England. The decree granted a limited divorce from board and bed, and constitutes only a legal separation under the New York state laws. Alimony of £30 per month was also granted by the English court, and a commission had been appointed to ascertain whether Mr. Boucicault's means were sufficient to pay this alimony. The proceedings were still under way, and were estopped by the death of Mr. Boucicault.

LOUISE THORNDYKE.

If there is no will, as is supposed, Miss Robertson will immediately on her arrival file a petition for letters of administration, and make affidavit that she is the only widow of Boucicault. It is not expected, however, that Miss Louise Thorndyke will remain idle, and the contest will bring to light much of the unpleasant testimony which was kept under cover during the suit for divorce.

Miss Robertson believes that the personal property left by Boucicault is worth the contest, and besides is actuated by the desire to fully establish her claim that the marriage with Miss Thorndyke was illegal. The manuscripts of Boucicault are said to contain one or two plays which have never been presented in public, and some unfinished plays that could be completed by any competent playwright. There are royalties also on a number of plays which are still being played.

Mr. Boucicault also had a quantity of running stock which, it is hoped, may yet prove paying investments. The amount and character of Mr. Boucicault's estate is not known, but Miss Robertson believes that the estate is worth more than was popularly estimated.

So far as is known Miss Thorndyke has not yet employed a lawyer. Ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer appeared for Mr. Boucicault when testimony was taken here in the divorce suit. Mr. Gerber, the law partner of Mr. Dittenhoefer, said Tuesday that it would be strange if Mr. Boucicault left no will, knowing as he did the claim of Miss Robertson that his subsequent marriage to Miss Thorndyke was bigamous.

The marriage of Mr. Boucicault and Miss Robertson took place in England, and, contrary to the report in the newspapers at the time of the divorce proceedings, Mr. Boucicault never set up the defense that he was not married to Miss Robertson. His attorneys both here and in England convinced him that such a claim was foolish.

The question of Miss Thorndyke's marriage to Boucicault will rest somewhat upon this claim, and altogether there will be a tangle of vexatious law points which will cause a protracted litigation.

The Engineer Killed.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 24.—At Banning station, on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, a local freight train ran into another train, killing Engineer James Shields.

BRIEF MENTION.

The coroner's jury investigating the cause of the deaths of the twenty-one persons who perished in the recent railroad disaster at Shoemakersville, Pa., fixed the blame of the accident upon H. C. Kemp, the rear brakeman of the forward coal train, into which the one following crashed. Kemp, notwithstanding the jury's censure, was discharged with the other witnesses.

Peculiar

Many peculiar points make Hood's Sarsaparilla superior to all other medicines. Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's. Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is now more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time, and retained its popularity and confidence among all classes of people so steadfastly.

WHITE HOUSE CHANGES

A Thorough Renovation of the Presidential Residence.

THE LOTTERY'S LAST LEAP.

Its Newest Scheme to Fight the Repressive Legislation Just Enacted Not Practicable—A Sharp Criticism on the World's Fair Commissioners.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24. — The White House is now topsy-turvy in the possession of painters and decorators, who are transforming the interior. It will not be ready for occupancy under two weeks, and when the president and his family return to Washington Wednesday they will have to "board round" or submit to many inconveniences.

The workmen have only begun to scrape the paper from the walls of the Blue room. This room will be more thoroughly renovated than any of the others. The walls will be covered with delicate hangings of silk, which will be a trifle lighter in tone than the late decoration. The furniture is now being gilded and covered with plush that matches the new shade of the hangings. The decorators have finished the private dining room, which looks as dainty and bright as possible in its new dress. Mrs. Harrison selected the paper. The ground is pale yellow, and a conventional pattern in bright gold is interlaced over it.

The frieze is wide and also of a conventional design, bordered at the bottom by a wide molding of gilt and at the top by a narrow band. The ceiling is covered by a star patterned paper. The pieces of furniture are being oiled and the old gilding retouched. The walls of the corridors are being decorated alike, both upstairs and downstairs. They are pale yellow in tone, the stucco work which covers them being done in wavy patterns, which light up beautifully. The frieze is darker in tone and of a plain, rough pattern.

Dr. Scott's room is the only one of the upper rooms that is finished. The paper that was dingy and dark with age and dirt has been removed, and in its place now hangs a dainty gold traced paper that makes the room one of the brightest on the floor. For years there has not been so thorough a renovation as is now taking place in the White House, and when Mrs. Harrison returns it will be to a satisfactory, pretty home.

The Lottery's Last Resort.

There is not very much credence placed in the alleged line of policy which the Louisiana Lottery company is said to be contemplating to fight the lottery bill, which has just become a law through the president's signature. Their threat to purchase a paper in Montreal and flood this country with it, trusting to the postal treaty existing between Canada and the United States to give this paper immunity despite the fact that it will fairly reek with lottery advertisements and lottery matter, does not find much credence here.

It will be remembered that Senator Sawyer had intended offering as an amendment to the house lottery bill a clause bearing on just this very contingency of lottery companies going to Moutreal or Mexico, as it was shrewdly expected they would do, but Mr. Sawyer found that the present postal laws which grant the postmaster general authority to stop any foreign publication containing objectionable matter would be constructed to include lottery advertisements, and that therefore such an amendment would be unnecessary.

No treaty that may exist between Canada and the United States can alter the definition of objectionable matter, and the Canadian papers containing these advertisements will be stopped very promptly the moment they reach the United States, and thus come under the jurisdiction of the United States postal authorities.

As to the other threat that they propose in a New Orleans paper to carry the case to the supreme court to test the constitutionality of the law, not very much is thought of it here in Washington. The government is fully determined to put an end to the lottery, and its vigorous treatment of Mr. Charles Thompson, the lottery agent in this city, shows that it will pursue its fight to the end.

Extravagant Fair Commissioners.

There is beginning to be felt here in Washington some impatience at the tendency toward lavish and unreasonable extravagance displayed by the gentlemen who compose the board of commissioners of the World's fair in Chicago. Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Willetts very naturally takes a deep interest in the fair because he will probably be in actual charge of the United States government's exhibit at the Chicago fair.

He said Tuesday: "The money which congress appropriated was to pay for the buildings, the site and other expenses to be used by the government exhibit; but at the horrible rate at which these people are spending their money, without rhyme or reason, up to the present time, I doubt very much whether they will have money enough left by the time the fair comes, if it ever does come, to pay for the buildings intended for the government exhibit. We had intended at first to ask for $2,000,000 for the government exhibit, but we have scaled that down to $1,000,000, and will make a strong fight to get so much. Of course if we cannot get that $700,000 will do, but it goes without saying that the completeness and grandeur of the government exhibit in Chicago will be in direct proportion to the money they allow us. At the present I can only say that something should be done to check the terrible extravagance of the commissioners."

An Old Lady Struck by a Locomotive.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 24.—Mrs. Beulah Adams, an old lady of 60 years, and wife of John Adams, a well known oyster dealer of Pleasantville, in attempting to cross the Pennsylvania railroad tracks at New York and Arctic avenues in this city Tuesday morning, was struck in the head by a Somers Point engine and was killed. A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and to-day is enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, Lung or Chest Trouble try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottles free at W. C. Keplinger & Co's drug store.

THE PRESIDENT'S HOLIDAY.

His Sojourn at Cresson Ended—Packing Up for Washington.

CRESSON, Pa., Sept. 24.—No official business was transacted by the president Tuesday. The members of the family spent the morning in packing, preparatory to taking their departure Wednesday. Mr. and Mrs. McKee and the children left here at 11 o'clock Tuesday night for Indianapolis. The president and Mrs. Harrison, Mrs. Dimmick and Miss Sanger will go to Washington on the Chicago limited express. The party will adopt the ordinary method of traveling, a change of cars will be made at Harrisburg.

As directions were sent to the executive mansion to forward no more bills to the mountains, the president has not yet received those which have been passed during the last few days. The bill providing for the transfer of the weather bureau from the war department to the department of agriculture, probably one of the most important awaiting the approval of the executive, will doubtless be signed immediately upon the president's return, as it is known that he favors the proposed transfer.

An urgent invitation was extended to President Harrison to visit Harrisburg Tuesday, but in view of the time needed to prepare for departure he was compelled to forego the pleasure which it would have given him to accept.

Although it is quite lonesome at Cresson at this time of the year, the members of the executive family enjoyed the solitude and expressed themselves as delighted with their stay. The president Tuesday morning gave a Cresson photographer a sitting at his studio.

ASPINWALL IN FLAMES.

It Is Feared the Whole Town Will Be Annihilated.

GALVESTON, Tex., Sept. 24.—Telegraphic advices just received from Panama state that the town of Aspinwall is being destroyed by fire. It is feared that the fire extinguishing appliances will not be able to cope with the fearful conflagration that is raging, and it is believed the entire place is doomed to annihilation.

At the hour of sending the dispatches the greater part of the city had succumbed to the flames and was a mass of smoking ashes, with the fire rapidly gaining headway and spreading in all directions.

No mention was made in the dispatches of any loss of life.

They Refuse to Participate.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 24.—Bishop Harkins, of the diocese of Rhode Island, has declined to participate in the celebration of the cotton centennial at Pawtucket. In his letter to E. W. Blodgett, chairman of the committee, he says: "Considering the object of the celebration and the manner in which it is to be conducted I decline to assist it." Rev. W. Halligan, pastor at Pawtucket, has come to the conclusion not to allow his Sunday school to participate in the parade for the following reasons: "When the matter was first laid before me I consented to have my children take part in it, feeling that it was to be a purely civic affair. A glance at the programme, however, convinces me that I was mistaken."

The Train Wrecker's Case Postponed.

TROY, N. Y., Sept. 24.—The case of Kiernan, the alleged train wrecker, was again adjourned Tuesday morning in Justice Grogan's court in West Troy until Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. Counsel for the defendant refused to go on with the case without an opportunity to cross-examine Superintendent F. A. Harrington, of the New York Central road, upon whose complaint Kiernan is held. Dr. Coburn's certificate stating that Mr. Harrington was suffering from palpitation of the heart and threatened inflammation of the bowels was produced and the case was adjourned as stated.

A Snug Little Windfall.

JOLIET, Ills., Sept. 24. — Mrs. Emma Cooper, formerly of Lockport, this county, has fallen heir to an estate of $9,000,000 in England. Her parents, as well as her husband, died some time ago, and she removed to Fulton, N. Y., where she keeps a dry goods store. Her maiden name was Garlick. A Rhode Island cotton goods manufacturer named Wooley, with an aged lady, was here recently looking for Miss Garlick to inform her of her good fortune, and on learning she was in Fulton left for that place.

Mills Starts the Campaign.

RACINE, Wis., Sept. 24.—Roger Q. Mills started the Democratic campaign in Wisconsin off with a hurrah last night at Lakeside Skating rink. The big building was crowded to the walls. More than 8,000 Badger state Democrats heard the tariff question ably presented by the distinguished Texan, and shook the building with cheers when he denounced the legislature for interfering with the schools. Leading politicians were present from all parts of the state.

A Pretty Big Bell.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 24.—The largest bell made in this country for the past quarter of a century has been successfully cast at a foundry in this city for use in the new Wisconsin Central depot in Chicago. It weighs 10,500 pounds, and is the fourth largest in the United States today.

A President on Brandy for Sickness.

The President of the Baltimore Medical College, Dr Byrd, who has thoroughly tested Speer's wines, etc., says:

I have prescribed Speer's Port Grape Wine with marked and decidedly beneficial effects. I am prepared to bear testimony to the value of his Pedro J Brandy, also, as a pure and valuable article in all cases of disease in which a reliable stimulant is required. I would be happy to feel that I was instrumental in inducing my fellow citizens to patronize these productions, to the exclusion of the foreign 'doctored' and harmfully adulterated wines and brandies with which our people are often injured.

The Only One.

Again it affords us much pleasure to be able to record the fact that the Pittsburg Exposition opened its doors promptly as advertised. The many things to be seen are worthy of much of our space, but we will dwell only on one exhibit, the only one of its kind at the great show. Well may we say it is worthy of comment. We refer with pride to the display of Mr Max Klein, the wholesale liquor merchant. There you will find a complete distillery in full operation. His Silver Age Rye stands on a pyramid high enough to overlook all other displays; the bbs, and cases show at once the extent of his trades, conveying the impression that he ships to all parts of the country. His Pennsylvania Rye Whiskies, his imported and domestic wines, brandies and cordials are prominent features. No other liquor house in the country would dare to compete with him in making a display, and no other house in his line can or will sell goods as pure and at such reasonable prices. You can leave orders at his stand or apply to him direct for his complete catalogue and price list. Such a house should receive the custom of all who wish fair treatment and to Max Klein 82, Federal St., Allegheny, Pa., we can recommend you.

My Life a Burden.

I was afflicted from infancy with Catarrh and with eruptions on my face for ten years. I was attended by the very best physicians, and tried a number of blood purifiers, without permanent relief. The mineral ingredients settled in my bones, and caused Rheumatic trouble. My life was a burden to me, and my case was declared incurable, when I saw S S S advertised. Eight bottles cured me entirely, and I feel like a new person.

PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICANS.

Leagues of the Keystone State at Their Third Annual Convention.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 24.—When the doors of the Academy of Music were thrown open Tuesday morning shortly before 10 o'clock for the admission of the delegates to the third annual convention of the Republican leagues of the state the long line of badge wearing men who waited with cards of admission in their hands promised a fuller attendance than was realized when the session began at 11 o'clock.

The parquet and circle were well filled, as was also the first gallery, and while there were not as many present as there were at night, when the academy was crowded to the dome, enough were on hand to make the session a rousing one and to give thunderous applause on the slightest provocation.

The features of the convention in the morning were President Stuart's address and the business session. In the afternoon the candidates on the state ticket addressed the convention, and Governor Beaver's speech was listened to eagerly.

At the immense meeting at night Speaker Reed, John M. Thurston, president of the National league, and Congressman Tolliver made addresses.

If a breach of the peace is committed warrants will be issued and the case sent before a judge.

All the morning papers applaud the arrest of McAuliffe and Slavin, and express a hope that the fight will not be allowed to take place in England.

Democratic Housewarming.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 24.—The Thomas Jefferson building, the new home of the Kings county Democracy, was dedicated Tuesday afternoon. The exercises began promptly at 3 o'clock, when David A. Boody, the president of the Thomas Jefferson association, formally turned the building over to the Democratic general committee. Chairman John P. Adams, of the latter body, accepted the premises with a brief but fitting reply. The presiding officer, Mayor Chapin, then made the opening address, being followed by Governor Hill, the orator of the day. Governor Leon Abbett, of New Jersey, was present and made a brief speech.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 15, 1890.

Representative McKinley has long been known as one of the hardest working men in Congress, but he and his republican colleagues on the House ways and Means committee broke all previous records for speedy commit tee work, in the consideration of the tariff bill It did not get over to the House until Friday afternoon; it was immediately referred to the committee, and this afternoon it was all ready to be reported to the House. The committee recommends non-currence in all of the Senate amendments, leaving it to the conference committee to settle the small differences of opinion which exist. If there is no hitch the bill will be in the hands of the conference committee by Wednesday, and it is expected that it will be reported back to the House and Senate with a week. The only amendments upon which there is likely to be a stubborn controversy are the sugar and binding-twine amendments. The latter will hardly be changed, but it would not be surprising if sugar goes as it was in the original House bill. All rumors of any intention on the part of the House to antagonize the reciprocity amendment are simply bosh.

The attempt to get up a financial flurry on account of the passage of the tariff bill with a clause which makes it go into effect October 1, has fallen very flat. It was stated that it would require $60,000,000 to enable the importers to get their goods out of the bonded ware houses by that date, but Gen Nettleton, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury very quietly put an end to that story by showing that not over $10,000,000 would be required, and he stated that between now and the first of October the Treasury would release more than $32,000,000 in addition to the ordinary current expenditures. An attempt was made in certain quarters to coerce the administration into adopting the Cleveland policy of depositing large sums of Government money in the National banks to relieve the stringency in the money market, but it did not succeed. Neither the President nor Secretary Windom believe in that sort of financiering.

Saturday was eulogy day in Congress-in the Senate the late Samuel J Randall was the subject and in the House Senator Beck. The custom is a beautiful one, and no one should have a word to say against it, but in view of the time consumed thus at this session—nearly a full month—many Congressmen favor the adoption of a suggestion recently made to hold these services on Sundays.

The committee investigating the Civil Service law held a session Saturday, at which Representative Governor accused the Civil Service commissioner of deliberate misrepresentation. The committee has adjourned until December. Its members are as tired of the subject as the public.

The committee investigating the charges against Gen. Raum has practically completed its work, and a report completely exonerating Gen. Raum on each and every charge made is expected from it this week.

The following bills by agreement of a republican caucus are to be considered by the Senate in the order named: The anit lottery bill; Repeal of the timber culture law; bill establishing private land claim courts; bill for relief of U. S, Supreme Court; bill for adjustment of laborers claims under eight hours a days work for laborers in Government employ, or engaged in doing government wokr; bill to transfer the Revenue Marine service from the Treasury to the Navy department; bill for the settlement of claims arising from Indian depredations; Paddock pure food bill (this is to be substituted for the compound lard bill which recently passed the House); Torrey bankruptcy bill; bill to place telegraph companies under the Interstate Commerce law; and bills relating to the District of Columbia.

Owing to the action of the Democrats in leaving the House and breaking a quorum a whole week has been wasted, and it will be no better this week unless enough republicans show up to make a quorum exclusive of democrats.

Big democrats are whispering ugly accusations against each other. It seems that there was an enormous corruption fund raised to beat Speaker Reed, and the men who contributed the money are accusing somebody of having stolen it One of them said "We sent enough money into that district to buy two Maine's, and there is nothing to show for it."

The republicans of the House held a caucus Saturday night and decided that Mr. McKinleys resolution discharging the committee of the whole of the House from further consideration of the tariff bill was the proper valuable time. The caucus did not officially discuss the date set for the tariff bill to go into effect, but from informal expressions of opinion it is thought that there is a strong probability that the date will be extended to about February 1,191.

Food] For The Beasts.

Central Park has a slaughter-house, says the Morning Journal, and Henry Zier presides over it: There worn-out horses, goats and sometimes other animals are killed and the meat prepared for the big beasts of the menagerie. Every other day Mr. Zier takes an old horse out of the adjoining stable, quietly ties his hind legs to a rope, which is attached to a wheel and pulley and in a jiffy the horse is in the air kicking for life, while, with one well directed stroke of his axe the butcher knocks all consciousness out of the animal's head, and within five minutes he is skinned, quartered, and the icebox is filled with as tasty and nicely cut horse meat as ever satiated the appetite of carnivora.

"These horses" said Mr. Zier, "are usually very old, and we buy them from dealers for from $2 to $4 apiece.

"On an average a horse will give 400 pounds of meat, and the animals generally get away with 150 pounds a day So you see we can get along with one horse every other day.

"Is the meat tender? Why, yes, fairly so. The animals like it as well as beef. But they do object to mule meat.

"I've only killed two of them since I've been here, and when we fed them to the lion I thought he'd break the bars. It was like giving him leather It was simply impossible for him to get a bite. Of course, when the little goats who are used to run the goat carriages get old or are no longer fit for use, we kill them and feed the meat to the animal's. As a rule, that is a great feast. They could stand goat meet every day."

Peterson's Magazine.

Peterson's Magazine for October is on our table. The steel engraving "Before the Battle" is a very handsome picture presenting the portraits of Minna Irving the popular poetess and her soldier husband. The fashion-plate and illustrations, present some new and effective fall styles. The needlework designs are varied and effective. The literary part of the number is excellent, and can only be equalled by the highest priced periodicals. The opening story "One October Morning" is well illustrated and well written. "Imprisoned Rainbows" by Louisa Jamison closes a series of interesting articles on precious stones. "The Watch of the Big Heart Lode" by M G. McClelland is one of the best stories we have ever read in a long while, and "Three Warnings" by Lucy H. Hooper will fascinate every lover of the supernatural. "Things Worth Knowing" and the household department are brim full of interesting and useful matter, This favorite magazine always grows better and better. Terms Two dollars a year. Arthur Love manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. NEW YORK FASHIONS.

CAMEL'S HAIR MATERIALS: TWEEDS CHEVIOTS: MILLINERY.

New Camel's hair materials show a very rough finish, with long hairs curled up, or lying loosely in all directions, while large plaids in soft, dark colors, cross each other on a sombre blue or brown surface, forming squares several inches in diameter. Stripes of Astrachan finish on a plain ground are another novel feature in these remarkable fabrics, and oval figures of all sizes, as well as squares are placed at intervals near the stripes, in order to lend variety to what would otherwise be, merely a striped material. Fleecy stripes in black, running both ways, from squares on crimson, heliotrope, blue, gray or brown grounds, the finish of the stripes being so shaggy, that if the colors were not very soft and subdued, the combination would be unbearable. Striking contrasts are seen in the Clan plaids, which are as fashionable as ever, and will be largely patronized by misses and young people generally. Cheviots are in rough finish with every variety of rich but quiet coloring; occasionally the faintest possible outline of a square is perceptible, in silken threads of dark crimson or blue. Bannockburn tweed is another very popular material for general morning wear; also Homespun which seems to retain its hold upon public esteem. Braiding, or applique work is exceedingly stylish, and nothing can be more charming than robe patterns in soft, heavy goods, bordered with velvet or plush; a floral design in braiding above the border terminates in the most delicate passementerie. Such trimming is employed only on the front breadth, waist, collar and cuffs, as it is so rich that a little of it goes a long way. Violent contrasts are not seen in this class of goods; colors being harmonious and delicate. For mourning wear, nothing is so desirable as Priestley's Henriettas, the double warp, being of the best quality silk, and the fitting of the finest Australian wool. These goods come only in black and blue black; therefore a perfect match can always be obtained, and to secure the genuine article, purchasers should see that Priestley is stamped in gilt letters every five yards on the under side of selvidge.

STYLES IN MAKING.

Are in many essential points the same as those of last season. Entire costumes of plaids will be worn, and combinations still remain in favor; sleeves being full and high on the shoulder, often with whole length of the arm. Velvet sleeves will again be epidemic, as many materials are so rich and heavy that they will not admit of any other addition. Skirts hang as plainly as ever—a necessity, as designs in dress goods are so large that otherwise a sense of confusion would ensue, and while on the subject of dress making, it can be added for the benefit of "Modiste" who wishes information, that Clark's Mile End cotton is conceded to be the best known substitute for silk, as it comes in all colors, and to a remarkable degree combines strength, smoothness and elasticity.

MILLINERY PRESENTS

some striking novelties, and the proportion of light colored felts is very large. Furry beavers will be in keeping with the shaggy camel's hair fabrics, and felts with low crowns and flaring fronts will be piled up with trimming, ribbon in many varieties, fancy pins, birds jet ornaments, to say nothing of "pasted" ostrich feather prompons, owl's heads, fur insects, etc. Capotes remain in favor for both young and old, for the former very small sizes in heliotrope, Nile green and russet brown are shown; for the latter, large sizes in all quiet colors. Plain and Astrachan plush will be largely used, also velvet and velvet ribbon; a pretty novelty being colored and black dots on contrasting surface, called by milliners "studded effects;" as jet dots on crimson, turquoise blue on brown etc. Birds are much in favor for hats with flaring brims and in one instance eleven black birds constituted the trimming of a dark blue velvet hat; three were grouped in front and eight others placed at intervals on the brim.

A Dissertation on Booms.

Arizona Kicker.)

For two straight years the Kicker has persistently opposed the idea of a boom to attract attention to our town. We have watched this boom business in scores of other places, and in every instance it has reacted disastrously: Our course has aroused the ire of certain spectulators, but we shall continue it just the same. We've got 200 acres of cactus pasture which we should like to dispose of to some Ohio farmer who wants to better his condition, and who could be worked up to part with $3,000 in cash, but we haven't the cheek. We own half a mile of side hill, which won't even grow rattlesnakes, but we haven't tha gall to boom it for a peach orchard. A million years hence we may have six railroads here, but we can't force ourselves to whoop-la! hurrah! over the prospect. We own about fourteen billion dollar's worth of wild cat mining stock, every mine being in the clouds, and but for our honesty we'd proceed to boom and unload We are at the head of a company to turn the Pacific ocean into the deserts of the west—president of an artesian well company—Secretary of the Great Strawberry Grower's Association, etc;, but we were born honest and we can't look a tenderfoot in the eye and lie to him.

No, gentlemen, this town is what it is and no more. It isn't going to be a second Chicago. It has no Niagara Falls. There isn't even good fishing within 30 miles of us. We simply have the great Aoizona Kicker, 148 saloons 16 gambling houses, five stores and a population of 3,800 souls, most of which will take "the other road" when the judgment day arrives. That's all, and those who don't want to come can stay away.

THE REAL OPENING DAY.

Grange Park Formally Transferred to the County Grange—Four Thousand People Present.

GRANGE PARK, PA., Sept. 17.—To day the Seventeenth Annual Picnic of the Patrons of Husbandry of Centre Co. and Central Penneylvania was formerly opened at Grange Park, near Centre Hall, and the transfer of the newly fitted up and arranged grounds appropriately made from the committee in charge to the county grange.

In our letter this morning we stated that it was raining; it did rain but quit without raining so very much and the wind soon coming up the drying process at once began and in course of half an hour or so the grounds were fair to middling. The morning trains soon began to arrive and hundreds of persons alighted. Soon, also, did the people begin to arrive in vehicles of all descriptions and very naturally the crowd began to increase; it continued increasing surely and rapidly until the arrival of the ten o'clock train from Bellefonte, which brought in about six hundred, when the crowd numbered anywhere from three to five thousand.

Promptly at ten o'clock a meeting was called for the big tent and the picnic was formally opened by Hon. Leonard Rhone in a nice little speech, which he had doubtless learned by heart, as the school boy says, and the grounds were formally transferred from the committee that had purchased and prepared them, of which committee Leonard Rhone was chairman to the county grange for its keeping and future management. Mr. Isaac Frain, Master of the County Grange, accepted in a neatly prepared speech, spoken in a loud tone of voice. Mr. Downing, of West Chester, was then called on and he made what might be termed the dedicatory speech, so that when he was through the grounds had been formerly transferred and dedicated, the picnic had been opened, the people had grown impatient and it was time for dinner.

It is impossible to try and describe the dinner hour. Anywhere and everywhere one might look they would see the open hamper and the well spread cloth. In front and in the tents well spread tables and hungry men, women and children. It not being etiquette to eat with the hat on of course it was laid aside and then to add to the convenience and pleasure of the occasion the wind was blowing a perfect hurricane and the heads of all looked like a rolled up porcupine with his bristles stroked the wrong way while one kept all the time thinking of that fanutian song "And the wind blew through his whiskers ;" and this was not the only torture for should there any stray hairs happen to flap loose they were sure to alight at a place where they were most conspicuous. Of course the above alludes to where people were eating in the wind and not to any one case in particular ; and moreover we don't suppose there were more than the nine-tenths of those present who ate in the open air so you see our description is applicable only to the flew (?) But dinner was eaten and thoroughly enjoyed notwithstanding and then a couple of hours were devoted to runing around, meeting friends, seeing the sights and being seen ourself, until two o'clock, or a little later when a meeting was again called in the large auditorium tent and Mr. I S Frain introduced Mr. J F Hall, Master of the Connecticut State Grange :

Mr, Hall is just on his way home from Chicago and was induced to stop over here and visit the picnic now in session. He is a plesant speaker and said some things to-day that are worthy of remembrance. He told the farmer to not work himself to death but practice a little judicious laziness ; to rest the muscle and work the brain ; to forsake the plow long enough to study up the market reports and that there they would find some things that would surprise them. For instance : In all large cities good apples last year were quoted as selling at $2 per barrell ; farmer's pickings at $1·50—25 per cent less. Now in this case the farmer loses 25 per cent. just because he has not studied how to pick and pack his apples properly. Is this judicious farming ? Another instance was cited of sending celery to market. Two neighbors sent celery to the same market ; one farmer sent his in an old dirty box the celery not trimmed and tied together in bunches with a twine string It was equally as good celery, however as that his neighbor sent but the latter had his packed in a nice new clean box; the celery nicely trimmed and tied in bunches with pink cotton tape that costs but about ten cents a mile, more or less. The first neighbor had hard work to sell his celery at 6 cents a bunch; the latter sold his readily at 10 cents a bunch. In this case the one man realized just 40 per cent. more than the other and all because he had practiced enough judicious laziness to study how to properly market his produce. Therefore can't the farmer see that it is more profitable to work part of the time with the brain. Mr. Hall explained the object of the grange, in his estimation, was a society for the banding together of men and women of one vocation as more likely to bring about an interchange of opinions regarding the great industry of the nation and thereby enable the farmer to reap the full benefits of his farm. The speaker advised farmers to stay out of politics so far as seeking an office was concerned. It is well enough to study the man for whom you intend to vote and cast your ballot only for a man who will legislate to your interest, but for yourself stay out of office. You can't do as much good there as you can banded together at home and demanding of your law makers that they regard and respect your rights. They are bound to do it, and it is the only way any good can come through the farmer.

After Mr. Hall concluded his speech Mr. Benninger, of Northampton county, read a paper on the growing and fruit culture and then wound up with an advertisement for the nursery he owns. Grange Master Frain then had a few words to say in commendation of what had been said by the two preceeding speakers, the announcements for to morrow were made and the audience was dismissed.

NOTES AND COMMENTS,

Mr. Will Hendrixson has a fruit and cigar stand on the ground.

In addition to the four thousand people on the grounds to-day there were twenty-five candidates.

Mr. Ed. Garman and Montgomery & Co., have two as nice exhibitions as can be seen anywhere.

Mr. Isaac Frain has made a medium of the picnic to advertise his blooded stock. Most all on exhibition is his.

It is plainly evident that what used to be a social picnic has now merged into a money-making machine. Everything you get you pay for and the management sold privileges without limit.

Snow Shoe Notes.

Quite a fair representation went to the Granger's Picnic to-day from our little mountain city.

Mrs. Nolan, the pleasant proprietress of the Mountain House accompanied her daughter Stella, as far as Philadelphia on her way to school. Miss Stella enters the Junior class at Lutheraville Seminary. Success to her.

A wedding to-morrow in Snow Shoe, guess who.

Miss Della and Blanche Budinger two of our Shoe's fair daughters, enter Birmingham Seminary shortly. Will take their departure next week. They are both talented and sensible girls. May they come back from Birmingham covered with "laurels." They have the ability if they apply themselves.

Mrs. O. M. Sheets accompanied by he granddaughter Bernice Knocke, of Harrisburg, started on this afternoon's train to the Granger's Picnic.

Mrs. Geo. Potter and interesting little daughter Sarah, who have been at the Mountain House for the past three weeks returned home Tuesday. Little Sarah was a general favorite and will be very much missed.

The Bush meeting at Gumania, under the auspices of the M. E. church, is still in progress, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. It has been in session since Sunday last.

Miss Lizzie Roth, is visiting at Northumberland. She went last Wednesday to attend the wedding of Mr. Miner, of Georgia, and Miss Nellie Voris, of Northumberland. Both were formerly in Snow Shoe.

Miss Anna Beates, of Pine Glenn, will teach in Clearfield Co., at Karthaus.

Our genial friend, Geo. Rote, is taking a two week's vacation. He is very much missed by the good people of Clarence.

Miss Johanna Regan has been, for the past two weeks, the guest of Mrs. Thos Hickey, of Bellefonte.

The Snow Shoe base ball nine expect to play the "Annie Rooney club of Bellefonte on Thursday at the picnic near Centre Hall.

The family of Mr. E. A. Gilliland, of Karthaus, were the guests of Mr. R. H. Gilliland last Sunday. They were, en route for the Granger picnic.

Mr. J. H. Beates, of Pine Glenn, registered at the Mountain House, on Tuesday.

Wanted to know who killed the snake ask Annie ; she knows.

Hastings Missed the Plum.

CHICAGO, Sept. 19.—At the meeting of the National World's Fair commissioners this morning the report of the executive committe was read by the secretary, as follows :

"The directors of the World's Columbian Exposition having recommended George R. Davis for director general o the exposition, we also recommend this gentleman to the national commission."

A minority report recommending Gen. Daniel H. Hastings, was read by Mr. Sewell, and signed by W J Sewell' of New Jersey ; A T Ewing of Illinois ; K C Kerens, of Missouri, and F. W. Breed, of Massachusetts. At the request of President Palmer these reports were laid over until the routine business of the morning had been transacted. The president then announced the standing committees. After announcement of the committees, the commission proceeded to ballot for director general. On the first ballot, Col. Davis received 50 votes and Gen. Hastings 44. Col. Davis' selection to the position was then made unanimous.

—Persons who are always complaining about hard times seemed to be able to attend the picnic.

THURSDAY'S PICNICING.

Fully Eight Thousand People Visited the Centre County Picnic on Thursday.

GRANGE PARK, Pa., Sept. 18.—This has been the big day of the picnic. It was a big day because it was a fair day—no rain falling to mar the pleasure of the occasion. Fully eight thousand people were assembled on the grounds to-day. Bellefonte did right nobly in sending her full quota o distinguished visitors. We noticed on the grounds this afternoon Ex-Governor Curtin, Ex-Judge Orvis, Col. J. L. Spangler, and a whole regiment of equally as brilliant men.

At 10 o'clock a m addresses were delivered by Col. J. H. Bingham, of Ohio, master of the National Grange ; and Senator Brown, of York county, lecturer of the Pennsylvania State Grange. Both speeches were interesting and instructive to the farmer as well as many hearers. In the afternoon the exercises opened promptly at 2 o'clock when Hon. Mortimer Whitehead was introduced :

He took for his text the four words "Mind your Own Business." He told the farmers that it was the minding of their own business that has brought about the advanced state of farming that exists at the present day, and the grange is to be thanked for teaching the farmer to mind his own business. The speaker stated that during the present year there have been 372 new granges organized in the United States, after which Mr. Whitehead launched out into a full-fledged free trade speech. He spoke of the Oleomargarine law ; of the law abolishing trusts ; of the law regulating monopolies, of all the vast and important laws that have been passed, and credited the entire list to the cause of the grange. The new Secretary of Agriculture, he said, was appointed at the instance of the grange. The bill authorizing free coinage of silver was accredited to the grange. Mr. Whitehead also went so far as to prophecy that at the next session of Congress silver would be entirely remonetized and the coinage of silver entirely made free. A general resume was then made of the grange and its work after which the speaker closed with the wish that it might always be perpetual.

Ex-Governor Curtin was then introduced and after a few remarks said he was with the granger heart and hand and united with them in any movement that would perpetuate the existing good state of the farming community, God has so ordained that out of the earth comes all that makes prosperity. I would not have you turn the grange into a political organization. The farmer is not a politician; I have had some experience in that line and I can teach you. It is from the earth and to the earth that man must go, and I pray God that when you do go you may go from the earth to Heaven and you may all do that, if you don't its your own fault. I know that taxes are unequal; you have a right to what you deserve and no more. We are willing to give you what you deserve but we wont give you any more. I tell you again I don't want you to turn politicians, its a hard road to travel. For four years I filled an office in which you put me. It was sleepless nights and sorrowful days, 750,000 men went down to death from this state to perpetuate this great government. When I look over this beautiful valley I feel that I have done something for the good of our country. When you first started your organization you had my sympathy and you have it still.

At the conclusion of Ex-Governor Curtin's speech, Mr. J. F. Hall was again introduced and made another interesting and instructive speech.

One of the great draw backs to the picnic is the disappointment those in attendance experienced by not being able to see and hear prominent men speak who were advertized to be present and then failed to come.

On the other hand it is plainly evident that the management this year have every reason to be satisfied with the picnic in a business or financial way. It is estimated that the proceeds of thi picnic will net the county grange in the neighborhood of several thousand dollars.

The exercises to-day closed with a grand display of fireworks this evening in addition to considerable music. The attendance this year is far beyond the expectations of the railroad company, hence all trains are very late and run irregular.

Nail Worker's Resolutions.

The following resolutions were not sent to us but we will copy them from our contemporaries :

WHEREAS, We, the iron and nail workers of the Bellefonte Iron and Nail Company, not members of the Amalgamated Association, quit work to help them establish their scale and system as we understood, with no pecuniary benefit to us :

AND WHEREAS, The leaders and men that persuaded us to quit work deserted us, and have gone to Pittsburg and other places to work, thereby leaving us to bear the blame and burden; and as the wages paid us at the said works are satisfactory to us :

AND WHEREAS, The said Amalgamated Association have refused to in any way assist us and we cannot live on wind: therefore, be it

Resolved, That we go to work as usual. The wages are satisfactory to us, and we will leave the Association to hereafter settle their own affairs.

WORKMEN.

We print the above simply to show the inconsistency of organized labor. It was in and through the Amalgamated Association that the strike at the nail works was brought about. The association asked it ostensibly to help the workers here but in reality to assist them in establishing their scale at other places. They promised assistance to the Bellefonte workmen but gave them none and when they had their own aims accomplished they cast them entirely off. The Bellefonters not having work for so long a time have suffered much privation and now are compelled to go to work or starve. Laboring men what do you think of this ?

Quigley—Merrey.

From LOCK HAVEN DEMOCRAT,

The marriage of Miss Sadie Merrey, of Beech Creek, daughter of J. W. Merrey, Esq., to Frank T. Quigley of the same place, came off last evening at the handsome residence of the fair bride's parents, about 180 guests being present The ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles James Wood, rector of the Episcopal church, this city, the interesting event taking place on the veranda in the midst of a scene of fairy-like beauty caused by the magnificent illumination of the mansion and spacious grounds.

At 7.30 o'clock the bride and groom made their appearance at the altar, the wedding march being played by Miss Azzie Hogan, after which the ceremony that united them as husband and wife was solemnly and appropriately performed.

The groomsmen on this occasion were James A. Wensel, of this city, and Henry C. Quigley, of Bellefonte, the bridesmaids being Misses Josie and Lillian Merrey, sisters of the bride.

The following are the names of the ushers: H B Clark, R H Clark, F C Diffenderfer, H H Fearon, L O Meek, J A Williams and E G Leyden. There were many guests present from various places among whom were some, quite distinguished people. The presents were many and valuable, among which were two lots and a dwelling, the gift of the groom's mother and a deed for a lot from the bride's father. The bride's mother also presented her with a tea set one hundred years old and the McElhattan club of this city presented a very fine clock. Immediately after the ceremony the bride and groom were serenaded by the Beech Creek band.

Of course the wedding feast was all that wealth and skill could make it, and the time afterwards was spent in dancing and in various other amusements until train time, when the happy couple left on their honeymoon trip, followed by the best wishes of many sincere and admiring friends.

After the departure of the newly married couple, the dancing was kept up until after midnight the music being furnished by the Germania orchestra, of this city.

Fietta Weaver Will be Pardoned.

Some time ago this paper printed a piece urging that Fietta Weaver be pardoned out of the penitentiary. Everyone at once saw the justice of the suggestion and now the proper authorities are circulating the following application (a copy of which is at this office and signers for which are solicited) for to be signed.

Commonwealth of Pa., vs. Fietta Weaver.—In the Court of Oyer and Terminer of the County of Centre. No. 1, April Term, 1890.

To the Honorable, the Board of Pardons of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania :

The petition of the undersigned citizens of Centre county, Pennsylvania, would respectfully represent : That at a Court of Oyer and Terminer held in and for the county of Centre, beginning the 28th day of April, 1890, Fietta Weaver, the above named defendant was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and on May 8th, 1890, was sentenced to a term of imprisonment in the Western Penitentary, at Allegheny City, Pa., for a period of two years and three months. Your petitioners further represent that they believe that the offense of which the said defendant was convicted (if committed by the defendant) was committed in self defense, and on account of her extreme ignorance, and inability to understand the consequences, she refused, when put on trial, to interpose the plea of self defense. Your petitioners, being thoroughly satisfied that the killing of Andrew Weaver, Sr., (if done by the defendant at all) was in self defense, and that in her conviction of the crime she has suffered great wrong, and it would further the cause of justice if she were pardoned, your petitioners would therefore earnestly pray that the defendant, Fietta Weaver, be pardoned by your Honorable Board and, as in duty bound, we will ever pray, etc.

The above petition is being numerously signed, as it should be.

A HORSE WHO CAN TALK!

Everybody has heard of a "horse laugh," but who has ever seen an equine gifted with the power of speech? Such an animal would be pronounced a miracle; but so would the telegraph and the telephone a hundred years ago. Why, even very recently a cure for consumption, which is universally acknowledged to be scrofula affecting the lungs, would have been looked upon as miraculous, but now people are beginning to realize that the disease is not incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure it, if taken in time and given a fair trial. This world-renowned remedy will not make new lungs, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy state when other means have failed. Thousands gratefully testify to this. It is the most potent tonic, or strength restorer, alterative, or blood-cleanser and nutritive, or flesh-builder, known to medical science. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh in the Head, and all Lingering Coughs, it is an unequaled remedy. In derangements of the stomach, liver and bowels, as Indigestion, or Dyspepsia, Biliousness, or "Liver Complaint," Chronic Diarrhea, and kindred ailments, it is a sovereign remedy.

GUARANTEED. "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only medicine of its class, sold by druggists, under a printed guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will benefit or cure in every case of disease for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded.

RYNDER'S LITTLE SCHEME.

A Clergyman to be Nominated for Governor to Divert Votes from Pattison.

The following special from Altoona tells its own tale:

ALTOONA, PA., Sept, 21.—T P Rynder, who poses as State Chairman of the Union Labor party, an organization which gave up the ghost two years ago, expects to spring a surprise in Philadelphia on Wednesday of this week. Mr. Rynder has been traveling about the State for some weeks securing the consent of persons in each county to serve as members of the Union Labor State Committee. His intention was to have this committee meet at Harrisburg and nominate a State ticket. The place of meeting has been changed to Philadelphia, but the tickets will be nominated. It is stated on the best authority that the Rev. N. C. Atwood, of Indiana county, is to be nominated for Governor, a Philadelphia man for Lieutenant Governor and a man from the interior of the State for Secretary of Internal Affairs. The Rev. Mr. Atwood is a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, who is popular with the workingmen. This announcement that he is to be nominated may change the programme, but there is good authority for the statement that the present intention of Rynder and his self-constituted committee is to do what is outlined above

The object of the work is to divert the votes of workingmen from Pattison. Rynder has been openly charged in other years with being in the pay of the Republican State Committee.

A Check is not Cash Payment.

The Supreme Court of Minnesota has lately rendered a decision of much interest to the business community in declaring that bank checks are not cash, and do not possess legal value as money until cashed. In other words, the giving of a check on a bank is not a payment when passed between debtor and creditor, but only becomes so when the money is received on it.

The court holds that in accepting a check from a debtor there is no legal presumption that the creditor takes it in absolute payment but only conditionally, or as a written acknowledgment of the debt. Where goods are sold for cash on delivery, and the purchaser tenders payment in a check or draft on his banker, such payment is only conditional. If the check is dishonored on presentation, the seller may retake the goods for the purchase money, even from the possession of a third or innocent party, unless it can be shown that the seller has been guilty of such negligence as would stop him from recovering in equity.

This decision is among the first rendered by higher courts that is so far reaching, and if supported by other high tribunals, will settle a mooted question in commercial circles. The same principle has been applied to unpaid notes by one or two courts, which have held that the seller does not lose his lien, for purchase money, on goods sold, until he receives the actual cash, and may retake at any time prior thereto if the indebtedness be not met at maturity.

Swearing on the Bible.

During the last term of Court His Honor commented on the fact that not a juror during the entire week had sworn on the bible. It really did seem remarkable, but probably an explanation for the same might be found in the following from the Altoona Graphic:

The custom of swearing on the Bible and kissing the book in courts of justice is one that ought to be abolished. A Bible that is used for this purpose, after having been handled and kissed for a few months or years by the miscellaneous crowd that frequents police or country courts, is not the most kissable object in the world. In a Philadelphia court recently a lady witness refused to "kiss the book," and the Judge said he didn't blame her, for the back was in a filthy condition, and had an odor or perspiration, tobacco, etc., about it. And it seems like a profanation and a humiliation to which the Bible should not be subjected to have a man take it in his hand and kiss it, and then swear to a deliberate falsehood, as has been done on one or two occasions within the past four years. A man who is sufficiently depraved to swear to a lie will not be deterred from it by this custom anyhow, and as it is a relic of the past that is no longer useful, it should be abolished, at least so far as the kissing is concerned.

Night Blooming Cereus.

A specimen of this rare and interesting plant was in full bloom at the residence of Mrs. Tuten, on Linn street Sunday morning and viewed by quite a number of neighbors who knew of its existence. Unlike most plants of this specie it opened its bud at 12 o'clock midnight and closed at that hour at noon, while other plants that the writer has observed open their buds quite early in the evening and close the following morning. This flower was quite large and very fragrant.

—The unclaimed articles of value found at Johnstown after the great flood of '89 were sold at auction in Pittsburg, recently. The proceeds are to be devoted to the erection of a monument to the unknown dead. The prices brought were low, valuable articles going for a few dollars. The sale will not realize over $1000. Many persons who had lost relatives in the flood attended the sale and carefully examined every article in the hope of obtaining some clue to the burial place of the lost ones. The hopes of some were gratified.

"Aural Practice."

Dr. H. K. Hoy returned on Saturday from Philadelphia where he had been in attendance at the State session of the Homeopathic Medical Society. While there the doctor read a paper on "Aural Practice," of which the Public Ledger had the following to say:

The papers which appeared to create the most discussion at the afternoon session on Thursday, were one by Dr. H K Hoy, of Bellefonte, on "Aural Practice," and one by Dr. W W Speakman, on "The Eye in Relation to General Diseases." The first, in his paper, said the number of deaf people in the world would make a vast multitude, the majority of whom are so through ignorance and neglect. One common cause of deafness is an accumulation of serumen, and may be readily cured by a thorough cleaning out. If the deafness is not caused this way, the next point is to ascertain whether the trouble exists in the middle or internal ear. This may be done by means of the tuning fork test, or by the improvement or impairment of the hearing in a noisy place.

If the tuning fork be heard better through the air as it vibrates near the ear than it does when applied over the mastoid process, the test signifies that the accoustic nerves nerves in the ear is affected. If the reverse obtains, if the vibrating tuning fork is heard more distinctly when applied to the mastoid process than when vibrating through the air as when held close to the ear, the evidence of the test is that the deafness may be referred to the middle ear. Of course, deafness might result from disease in both, and this would complicate a case to the bad interest of the patient.

The patient, also, who hears best in a noise, as when riding in cars or in a crowd when many persons are talking, has in this fact evidenced that he suffer, from affection of the accoustic nerves while he who hears best in a quiet place undoubtedly suffers from the effects of the middle ear disease.

The doctor's paper received more favorable press mention than any other paper read at the session and there were quite a number and some by very eminent members of the medical profession. The next meeting of the society will be held in Pittsburg. Dr. Hoy invited them to meet in this place but, incredible as it may seem, there was only one doctor present beside Dr. Hoy, that had ever been to or knew anything about Bellefonte.

The Snows of Sixty Winters.

At the residence of ex-Senator Peale on Saturday there was a pleasant union in honor of the ex-Senator's birthday. There were present only the immediate relatives, consisting of Mr. Peale's and his sisters' families. He is the only male representative of his father's family, but has six living sisters, all of whom were present, as follows: Mrs. DeHass, of Mahanoy; Mrs. Dr. Lumley of Williamsport; Mrs. Dr. Musgrove and Mrs. Huling, of this city, and Miss Theresa Peale, of Sunbury. The occasion was a memorable one and was much enjoyed, Senator Peale is still a youngish looking gentleman, notwithstanding that the snows of sixty winters rest upon his head. He is still an active man and an able lawyer with a large practice in and outside of this Senatorial district. We hope there are yet many years in store for the amiable and distinguished ex Senator,—L. H. Democrat.

President Harrison Over the Mountain.

On Saturday President Harrison accompanied by his family, General D H Hastings, Assistant General Passenger Agent George W Boyd and Supt. S S Blair, in a special train made a tour of the coal regions of Centre and Clearfield counties stopping at Houtzdale, Philipsburg and Clearfield. A short stop was also made in Tyrone. The President was enthusiastically received at every stopping place and at every station along the road crowds had assembled to see the President's train go by. About an hour was spent at each place over the mountain. No speaking of any consequence was done but lots of handshaking. The train bearing the distinguished party left Tyrone at 11.10, a, m. and returned at 6 in the evening. It was in charge of Conductor Allison Haupt.

—General Hastings was not beaten in the contest for Director General of the World's Fair. When the General arrived in Chicago in the beginning of last week and saw how things looked and that Davis was a candidate he refused to enter the race, hence made no fight for the place. The vote he received was given unsolicited and was certainly very complimentary to General Hastings.

—Elliott Barnes' great military play, "The Irish Corporal" will be produced in the Opera House on Monday, September 29th, on which occasion Mr. Tony Farrell will appear as "Jerry" supported by the well known soubrette, Miss Jennie Leland, and a strong company of artists. The "Irish Corporal" is founded on incidents of the late civil war and a beautiful story of love and devotion.

A Chapel Dedicated.

Last Sunday was an interesting and encouraging day for the members and friends of the Methodist church in Bellefonte. The day was set apart for the dedication of the neat new chapel which the congregation has just completed at Coleville. This building was a pressing necessity to meet the needs of the Sabbath School, prayer and class meetings, and for the cost is a model of convenience and beauty. The inquiry so generally made on Sunday was how so good a building could be constructed for $700 ?

The services of Rev. G. D. Pennepacker, of Clearfield, (a former pastor here) were secured for the occasion. He preached an impressive and eloquent sermon at 2,30 p. m., in the Grove near the chapel, to a very large concourse of people. After which the pastor, Rev. W. A. Houck, dedicated the house to divine service according to the Ritual of the Methodist church, about $300 was raised during the day, which added to the sum previously secured, covers the cost of the structure.

The Trustees of the Methodist church of Bellefonte deserve the congratulations of all friends of the cause of religion and morality for projecting and carrying to completion this good enterprise.

The members and friends of the church in, and about Coleville have been untiring in their devotion to this work and to-day are happy in the possession of a house in which to push forward the work of saving sinners and building up christian character. Rev. Mr. Pennepacker, besides preaching the sermon of dedication, delivered two incisive and delightful sermons to large congregations morning and evening in town. We should judge from the look of things on Sunday that there is a great future before this growing church.

Lost in Lock Haven.

G F Hoy and wife, of Hublersburg, went to Lock Haven on Monday morning, taking with them their little girl, aged about three years or a trifle over. They stopped at Mr. Miller's of the Racket store, at 115 Church street, and during the absence of Mr. Hoy attending to business on Main street, and while Mrs. Hoy was up at the Normal school building, the little one strayed away from the house and got lost. Luckily, however, Constable Bob Martin got on the track of the little one and finally discovered her in the house of Mr. Hawkins, away at the lower end of Main street in the First ward, being taken care of by the Hawkins family. The little mite had strayed all that distance from 115 Church St., and it is fortunate that she escaped falling into the canal.

Record of the Fifth Regiment.

The report of Major Patterson, Inspector of the Second Brigade, National Guard, as to the standing of the different companies in the brigade at the inspection last spring, has been filed at the Adjutant General's office. It shows the following rating of efficiency and attendance for the Fifth Regiment, graded to 100 as perfect: Fifth Regiment, Col. Burchfield's, efficiency, 57 8, Co. A., Capt. Bare; efficiency, 57.8. Co. B, Capt Reber; efficiency, 71.6. Co. C, Capt Bell; efficiency, 56.5. Co. D, Capt. Kennedy; efficiency, 44.2. Co. F, Capt. Braughler; attendance, 85.7; efficiency, 61.4. Co. G, Capt. Elder; attendance, 85.7; efficiency, 63.4. Co. H, Capt. Wonders; attendance, 77.7; efficiency, 47.9. Co. I, Capt. McNamara; attendance, 74.6; efficiency 33.

At the Opera House.

Vreeland's Operatic Ministrels was at the Opera House last evening, and entertained a large and appreciative audience. The performance gave excellent satisfaction throughout, but the specialities by Messrs. Larry McAvoy, Geo W Woods, and Franey & Kelly, were particularly worthy of mention. Either of the above gentlemen responded to a number of encores, and should they ever return to our city they will get a reception that will amount to an ovation. It might also be mentioned that the musical branch of the show especially the orchestra, was the best ever seen with a minstrel party here.—Meadville Herald, April 10, '90.

Will be in Garman's Opera house this evening, Sept. 25th. Tickets now on sale at Parrish's drug store.

—A newspaper editor's visitors represent every age, class, creed and condition of humanity. Very often they represent inhumanity also. But they are all welcome of course. A newspaper editor is always glad to be interrupted in his work. The public understands well enough that newspaper editors have hardly sufficient work to keep them healthy anyhow. Nobody recognizes the charitable intent of the caller better than the editor.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

All parties interested in the coming session of Argument Court will please take notice that the same will be held on Wednesday, October 1st, instead of the first Tuesday in the month as is generally customary. This change is made necessary because Judge Furst will be unable to be present on the latter date.

The owners of the Brockerhoff House are still substantially improving that popular Hotel, the latest being a contract with the Logan Machine Works, of this place, for the introduction of steam heat throughout. After the completion of all the improvements now under way, the Brockerhoff House, with the excellent management of Mr. Brandon, will be complete in all its appointments.

A Check for $1000.

This morning Mr. W. H. Musser, the General Agent of the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, showed us a check for one thousand dollars drawn in favor of Mrs. Loretta Yohey, wife of Mr. J. J. Yohey, who died a few weeks ago. It is now about seven years since this company has been doing business in Centre county and, although they have written almost a half million dollars' worth of policies, this is the first death that has occurred in Centre county. This shows the very complete and careful way in which the company transacts its business, and is a very good recommendation for them, as is also the prompt manner in which they have paid the amount of the policy held by Mrs. Yohey. Mr. W. H. Musser, their general agent, is located in Crider's Block.

—A large and appreciative audience greeted C. W. Vreeland's Operatic Minstrels at the rise of the curtain last evening. The first part costumes and stage settings were novel and unique, and received a well deserved round of applause. Larry McAvoy and Geo. W. Woods on the outside ends ably assisted by Franey & Kelly, kept the audience in a roar while doing their respective turns and either of the above artists responded to a number of encores. Every feature of the olio is to be commended, especially the big song and dance, and Larry McAvoys' magnificently and handsomely costumed Base Ball Tableau and Clog. Manager Kennedy regrets not having secured the company for two nights instead of one.—Rochester Express, Feb. 27, 1890.

How to Make Good Bread.

Put two handfuls of hops into a thin bag and boil it in an earthen vessel in three tinsful of water until the strength is out, then stir in three good sized grated potatoes with three tablespoonfuls of flour made into a batter and one tablespoonful of salt, let boil until cooked; then add one teacup of sugar, and when cold enough, one teacup of good yeast and set to sponge. One teacup of this yeast is sufficient for three loaves of bread; knead and work and you will be sure to have good bread.

The Senatorial Conference.

The Lock Haven Democrat has the following to say about the Senatorial Conference which meets in Tyrone to-day:

The Democratic Senatorial conference for this district will meet in Tyrone to-morrow and make the first attempt to decide who shall be our Senatorial standard bearer. There are three candidates before the Conference, T. C. Hipple, Esq. of this county, P. Gray Meek, of Centre county and Matt Savage, of Clearfield. All are able, competent men, and either would make the district a creditable Senator. Clinton county, however, claims that she is entitled to the honor as Clearfield and Centre counties have each been well served.

A number of Mr. Hipple's friends will go up to Tyrone with him, and the more good, solid, influential men that go the better. The people here are in earnest; they desire that Clinton's claims shall be recognized as being based on justice and right and the conferees and the delegation to Tyrone will use their best efforts to honorably obtain the nomination for our candidate. Should they fail to succeed, then the Democracy of Clinton will do the next best thing, support the man who may be nominated, but both Centre and Clearfield should bear, in mind the fact that political equity demands that this county should have the preference.

All Blooded Stock.

Early last Spring Isaac Haupt and Dr. Hoy went into partnership and bought two full-blooded horses. The above named gentlemen are both lovers of good and blooded stock. Later in the season Dr. Hoy bought some full blooded Cotswold sheep, and later both gentlemen purchased blooded hogs and now Mr. Haupt has caffed the climax by securing a full blooded Holstein bull, which is now not yet 3 years old but which is a magnificent animal, and worth the time of any lover of good stock to go and see. Mr. Haupt is just completing a new stable on the alley in the rear of Thomas street, which stable, by the way, is a model of convenience and comfort and in which he will in the future keep his blooded stock. It is needless to say that the gentleman takes great delight in his stock and is always ready and willing to show it to any man, and just now he is particularly anxious to display that magnificent specimen of the Holstein breed. All stock raisers should go around and see him.

MCQUILLAN—September 20th, 1890, of cholera infantum, Harry R. son of J. H. and Sadie McQuillan, aged 7 months.

I often wondered how it come
That it should happen thus;
That God would pluck that sweet boquet
And cast it down to us.

Christ called him from us
And he knows
Why he plucked the tender bud
Before the withered rose.
